THE MOCCASIN MASSACRE or THE GREAT MOONSHINE FEUD

Passing the gently rocking chairs along the verandah of the gracious and sedate Highlands Inn, one would never suspect that it was once the garrison of the town of Highlands while the men of the town "shot it out" with the moonshiners of Moccasin County, Georgia, who were barricaded in a shed on the site of the present Edwards Hotel opposite.

All this happened in the year 1883, not too long after the town was founded. Highlands Inn was The Smith House, owned and operated by Mr. and Mrs. J. Jay Smith, early settlers of Highlands.

A formal Declaration of War had been made on Highlands by Moccasin Township in Rabun County, Georgia, which adjoins Highlands township.

The reason for this Declaration of War was that two of the Georgia moonshiners were locked up in the Smith House. One, Avery Henson, had been arrested in Moccasin for selling moonshine in Highlands (a temperance area) and the other had been caught while trying to help Avery escape. This called for fightin'.

After the Declaration of War and on the day named, the Moccasin Army, eighteen strong, marched on Highlands. Knowing that this could happen, the Highlands men had bundled up their women and children in the Smith House for
