

CLASS PROPHECY

High School. Her method is quite different from most teachers. She sings to her students—"It's up to you, don't let me down, my darling." She is also assistant coach for the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Jim Peebles has become the husband of the nation's number one golf widow — Libby Rumble.

Ronald Percise has gone astray. He's head coach at East Carolina.

Peggy Ward now plays lullabies on the organ to her five children. Jo Ann Moore comes over occasionally from her art studio to assist on the harp.

"Jeanie's Place" is really booming in Vanceboro. Proprietor is Jean McLawhon. The able and experienced bartender is Mickey Raynor.

J. P.'s Zoo classes finally got the best of him. Joan Kelly has taken his place. She probably won't last long either.

Bonney Wilson and Marguerite Glendenning are now serving as advisors to the President — the President of the Tuesday afternoon bridge club of Siberia, which meets every Wednesday in Panama.

Ye old crystal ball is going out of focus. It seems as though the rest of the graduates have settled down to quiet lives of stock-car racing, Russian Roulette, and the like. Just normal everyday activities.

The time has come to pack away the crystal ball until next year. We, the humble under-graduates, bid you all farewell and wish you unforetold success in the future.

Ye CLAS Prophet,
Ruby Wiggins.

TO YOU SENIORS

ating what you read, hear, and see that you may become increasingly a mature person, resistant to propaganda. Never lose sight of your responsibility to yourself and your fellowman to be courteous, gracious in manner, and as thoughtful of the needs and aspirations of others as you are of your own interests. Maintain always a deep and abiding respect for honest work and workmen. Continue to enrich your religious experience and enlighten your conscience by an intelligent search for Christian truth and expression of that truth in your everyday living and in loyalty to the church of your choice. Stand up to the future with humility and confidence.

Whatever your destiny, let me say to you that we will be watching with genuine interest your progress. Your Alma Mater is proud of you.

Sincerely,
Travis White.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE

ways. First, there is the light of friendship I see shining in the eyes of my fellow-students as I pass them in the halls and on the campus. Then there is the light of Christian reverence and nearness to God I feel as a hush settles over the campus and the strains of music for Silent Meditation fall softly on my ear. There is the lightness of head, and heart, and feet I experience when our boys score another basket and make our dream of becoming the North State Champions a dream no longer but a reality. There is the light of the sun shining through the stained windows of the chapel and falling on my face and warming my heart, giving me the feeling of belonging to something vital, something worth while. And finally, there is that light kindled by the knowledge that student, advisor, professor, dean, president, all are ready to give first attention to my interests, my ideas, my suggestions, never failing to give me credit where credit is due, advice when advice is needed, faith when clouds are grayest.

Have I found the "light of life?" I think I have. If one has found a renewed interest in life, true Christian comradeship, a goal to strive for and an end to meet; should there be any doubt? No, for once I feel rather certain of myself. Sure! sometimes the road may become a little bumpy, the hill a little steep, or the room may grow a little dim, but then I'll have only to look ahead upon that "burning torch" moving steadily forward. Atlantic Christian College on the march, carrying before her the banner which bears those noble words: "They Shall Have the Light of Life," "they" meaning "you" and "me."

club editor and the writer of the religious editorials; Le-raine Evans, who has so patiently folded, pasted and mailed thousands of COLLEGIATES; Barry Lamm, the little man with the camera; Georgia Tuck, who has written the book reviews; and Helen Whitty and Connor Jones who have served as reporters.

Eighth, the sports editor, Phil Houchins, has been most efficient. I don't believe a better sports editor can be found on any college newspaper staff. Thank you, Phil, for being on the ball.

Yes, my serving as editor of the 1954-55 editions of the COLLEGIATE has been most enjoyable and most successful. But the success came only through the staff itself.

As I bring my editorship to a close I wish to thank the student body for having given me this opportunity to serve, and again I wish to thank all those who have contributed in any way possible in making this twenty-first year of the COLLEGIATE so successful.
