Stage And Script Tells Production

Stage and Script will sponsor a production of "John Brown's Body" on March 1 and 2 in Howard Chapel at 8 p.m.

This will be a somewhat unusual program. "John Brown's Body" is not a play in the usual and conventional sense, but is an epic poem. This production will be primarily a reading. There will be some scenes acted and pantomimed, but the major narrators of the story will be handled by four readers. In this manner will be disclosed the nature of the personalities that move through the work. This epic is a poem dealing with many aspects of life against a single historical background - the Civil War. The two heroes of the story, Jack Ellyat from the North and Clay Wingate of the South, are the threads which hold the work together.

Two heroines emerge, also - Melora Vilas and Sally Dupre. Their lives are eventually bound up in the lives of the two heroes.

A vital part of this presentation will be a background chorus. This chorus will sing battle-songs, speak in unison and make assorted noises and sound effects.

By speech, action, choral readings and singing, and organ music, the production will endeavor to bring home to the audience a part of the vast tragic vision which Stephen Vincent Benet had of this country at a most agonizing moment in its history.

Stephen Vincent Benet, author of "John Brown's Body," lived at one time or another in many part of the United States. Yet he wrote this, his greatest work, while he was abroad in Paris. It has been said when a writer leaves his homeland, his nostalgia grows and he is moved to write about his own country. Such a case in point was Stephen Vincent Benet in Paris.
