Eleven ACC Students Attend State Student Legislature

By DWIGHT WAGNER

Eleven ACC students attended and participated in the annual State Student Legislature held in Raleigh last weekend. Those attending were, David Webb, Cookie Wickham, Martha Sue Mewborn, Sarah Patterson, David Griffin, John Gorham, Bobbie Ellis, Carol Wells, Jerry Carter, Clay Brown, and Dwight Wagner.

The annual session opened on a sour note with the refusal of Dr. Christopher Crittenton, head of the archives and history department, and Gov. Dan Moore to allow the student group to use the old Capital chambers this year as has been the custom in years past. Little time was lost before the SSL adopted a resolution expressing strong disapproval over the rejection of the old Capital chambers.

The body met as a whole for its first meeting at 2:00 p.m. Thursday afternoon and shortly afterwards adjourned so the delegates could meet in their respected houses, the House and Senate, in order to elect officers. ACC was well represented in this respect with David Webb elected President of the Senate. Cookie Wickham was elected recording secretary of the House for the second year in a row.

Following supper there was a dance at the Embers Club, but many of the ACC delegates had to leave early in order to prepare the ACC bill for its presentation the next day. The work session, held in the Sir Walter Hotel, where all the SSL delegates were staying, finally broke up around 2:30 a.m. so that a little sleep could be had before the start of the morning session.

The Friday morning session began sharply at 9:00 a.m. with the House meeting in the education building and then in the agriculture building when conditions in the education building became overcrowded. The Senate met in the basement of the Baptist church in the immediate area.

In the afternoon session the ACC bill which was entitled "an unlimited education act" was presented late in the afternoon and it met strong opposition in both the House and the Senate.

The body adjourned at 5:00 p.m. in order to hear a find address from Dr. Frank Porter Graham, former president of UNC and the consolidated university system. Dr. Graham spoke on the history of civil liberties in our country and with a particular reference towards today's problems. He is strong favor of the open forum on the campuses of America's colleges and universities.

The business of the SSL went on after supper with a session that lasted until 11:45 p.m. Following this session there were numerous small parties back at the hotel.

The final session of the SSL began early Saturday morning and was completed in the afternoon with the meeting of the whole body to consider resolutions and to elect officers for next year's session. The main resolution presented called for the right of student bodies to invite any speakers they desired to hear and the right to hold open forums. The resolution was adopted by a vast majority.

Many interesting bills were presented during the session. The University of North Carolina's bill called for the establishment of a unicameral legislature. After strong debate it was defeated. North Carolina State's bill called for legalized abortions in cases where health of mother and child was involved. This bill was passed. Other bills dealt with air pollution, voting registration, judicial reorganization, and many other topics.

ACC Bill Defeated At SSL Meeting In Raleigh

The bill presented by ACC at the Student State Legislature ran into strong opposition and was unable to gain passage during the session. The bill was entitled "an unlimited education act."

The bill came before the body in both houses around 4:15 p.m. Friday afternoon. John Gorham presented it in the Senate and Dwight Wagner presented it in the House.

In the Senate, Gorham was asked many questions about the bill and after short debate Sections 1 and 3 were deleted after motions had been raised to take such action. Section 1 of the bill called for an increase of .4 of 1 per cent in the cooperative income tax level in order to sponsor more community colleges. Section 3 called for the minimum withdrawing age in the public schools to be raised from 16 to 18.

In the House, Wagner also encountered many questions with regard to the bill and a quick amendment to delete section 1 was passed by the body. Since it was close to adjournment time, a motion was made to ta-

Clifford Poole And Fred Barber To Play Leading Roles

Robert Bolt's "A Man For All Seasons," the drama of the struggle between Sir Thomas More and King Henry VIII will be presented by Stage and Script as its third production of the year on Thursday and Friday, March 3 and 4 in Howard Chapel at 8:15.

Originally produced in London with great success and later in New York, where it won the Critic's Circle Award as the best play of the 1961-62 season and the Dramatist Guild's Award as the best play of the year, the play marked the exciting debut of one of England's newest young serious playwrights. Robert W. Corrigan, noted American scholar and drama authority, included the play in his choice of the five most important plays of the modern European theater and Bolt as England's leading living playwright. Mr. Bolt's screenplay for "Lawrence of Arabia" later went on to win an Academy Award for the best screenplay of the 1962-63 season.

In "A Man for All Seasons" he tells of More's refusal, because of the dictates of his conscience, to agree to the divorce of Queen Catherine by the King, who desired to marry Anne Boleyn. Bolt's thesis in the play is that a man must remain true to himself and his ideals against all pressures, be they political, social or religious. His second thesis is that More was not a religious martyr, but a great exponent of the idea of human man and that society frequently sacrifices the man of genius and the great hero in the name of the progress of the Common Man, who does not have the ability to understand the "Hero" and must destroy all men of greatness.

Clifford Poole, who played the lead in "The Playboy of the Western World," appears in the role of More with Fred Barber appearing as the true villain, the Common Man. The leading female roles are played by Dorothy Wyman, as More's crude and coarse, yet faithful, wife and Sandra Edwards as his daughter Margaret. Other leading roles will be played by Robert Parvin, John Grady, James Burroughs, and Fred Edwards.
