

A C C Student Center Completed

Lounge Area Will Occupy Old Cafeteria

With the completion and opening of the new student center, Hardy Hall, which for years served as the campus cafeteria, will undergo a face lifting to prepare it for its new function of serving as a day student lounge area, ballroom for student dances and perhaps serve as a dining hall for special events and receptions.

Underneath the old dining hall, once occupied by the student center, The Bohunk, will house offices of the Student Government Association. Collegiate and Pine Knot offices will also be housed downstairs, along with maintenance staff offices.

The old building, which has served ACC for so long a time, will go on serving. Perhaps students will never forget the smoke-filled meeting place, the center of ACC's bridge champions, referred to as The Bohunk.

Construction Of $700,000 Union Ends

One of the most noteworthy additions to the campus today is the recently completed Student Center. Located at Gold and Deans Street, the new facility was placed in operation on Jan. 6.

Constructed at a cost of some $700,000, the building houses a large cafeteria, student lounge and recreation areas, student personnel offices, book store, and the college post office. Cost of furnishing the building amounted to some $25,000. The majority of the funds to furnish the building were provided by the Atlantic Christian College Alumni Association.

Program

The new facility was constructed as part of the college's 15-year development program. Need for the Student Center came as a result of the college's master plan for a larger resident student enrollment.

Of contemporary design, the building is constructed of masonry, steel and structural glass. Heat for the building is furnished through the college's central heating plant. Airconditioning is provided through a self-contained system to make the building suitable for year-round use. The walls of the building are of masonry while the majority of the flooring is of terrazzo.

Large Kitchen

Food for the cafeteria is prepared in a large kitchen which runs the width of the building. The well-lighted facility is equipped with the most modern kitchenware. All working surfaces and kitchen utensils are of stainless steel. Two large walk-in type deep freeze units are located on the lower receiving area. Freight service to the kitchen is provided by elevator.

The main dining room is designed so that it may be divided

The building is constructed on two main levels with a large overhanging roof. Located on the first level are student lounge and recreation area, a large book store, the college post office and student personnel offices.

The main entrance to the building opens into a spacious reception area. To the right of the reception hall is a student lounge and recreation area which is provided with billiard tables, numerous other game tables, color television. 'Know And Tell'

Ritual Preceded By Neuro-Activity

By MIKE ROACH

The semiannual ritual of "know and tell" is getting close to reality again. For the upperclassmen, exams are an evil necessity which are better off forgotten, but for the freshmen the exams are the first in a series of eight two-hour solo flights through the dense vacuum of their inner space.

The traditional run on "MID-NIGHT OIL" has been very slight so far, but as the hours dwindle away toward D-Day, the use is expected to increase rapidly. Everyone seems to look pretty normal so far, but during the weekend and the following week the scene will become similar to that of a medical rehabilitation center, as eyes are barely open and people drag about under the pressures of above normal neuro-activity. Nervous tensions build up prior to the blast off of knowledge and continues until that time when the fruits of increased study are posted.

For some, increased study will pay off, but for others who never heard of studying for any test except the night before will realize the error of their ways. There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. . . Sorry 'bout that; better luck next time.

Many students have been keeping well above their subjects by

The burning of mid-night oil, Takes place at semesters end; It's a synonym for cramming, On which most of us depend. Follow this girls example, And sleep during the day; Forget the mid-night oil, You'll never pass that way.

No Publication Set For Month Due To Exams

Due to the upcoming exams and the ensuing semester break, The Collegiate will not be published the remainder of the month of January. Publications will be resumed on a normal basis beginning Feb. 8.

Interested persons with items to contribute to The Collegiate are reminded that publication schedules for the upcoming semester are available at The Collegiate offices in the Student Government Building.

Caught In Maze?

Though the scene snapped by Publications Director Milton Rogerson seems to suggest several students caught in a maze, the students are actually travelling the ramp leading into the cafeteria. The ramps, designed to allow the students to wait in line inside the building, offer a quick target for the eyes of a camera bug.
