ATLANTIC CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, APRIL 22, 1971

NUMBER TWENTY-TWO

President Nixon has declared April 18-24 as Earth Week. This week is to make the American people more aware of their environment. This scene depicts serene peace, beauty and tranquility that we, as Americans, must preserve.

Earth Week Activities

Population Growth has been conducting an environmental awareness program this week in relation with Earth Week. The week's activities began with a display of the geometric progression of population based on the number of births per minute, hour, and day. Elephants and Butterflies, the controversial pamphlet printed at the University of North Carolina, along with ecology posters were sold on Tuesday.

Literature dealing with the effect of phosphate content in detergents to the water resources of the world was on hand Wednesday. Materials describing the number of species of animals which have become extinct since the turn of the century was also distributed.

Today's program included a debate between Dr. Paulsell of the Department of Religion and Mr. Larry Whitlock from Psychology concerning the pros and cons of abortion. Students also served on the panels. The last rites for Mother Earth were to be held late this afternoon.

The activities revolving around Earth Week close tomorrow with the planting of trees in Wilson.

Challenge 71 Probes Ecology

Six ACC students represented the college recently at the Challenge '71 Symposium at Wake Forest University. The Challenge topic, "The Challenge of Survival: Not Man Apart," focused on environmental issues with special concern over where society is heading for the future. Andy King, Winn Clayton, Diane Hicjman, Bill Bousman, James E. Jones, and Joyce Copeland composed the local delegation.

Keynoting the four-day event was consumer-advocate, Ralph Nader. Nader challenged the Challenge audience to consider support for a North Carolina program to provide funds for a student-public interest organization to handle student concerns. Such a program, he informed the group, is in the pioneer stage in Oregon and Minnesota. The establishment of a citizen interest lobby would have tremendous effect on congressional action was emphasized in his address, "as long as these millions of Americans sit watching the soap operas, chatting on the phone, bowling or watching the Dallas Cowboys and the New Orleans Saints in a kind of a drunken stupor, as long as that continues and those valuable resources of citizen time and energy are fiddled away, then no matter how much the economy grows...there shall be little improvement...We're down to the grass-roots, citizen-power." The recent defeat of the SST by the powerful citizens lobby was cited as an example of public opinion and its effect on the legislator.

Other major addresses of the Challenge '71 program included a plea for personal commitment in the clean earth campaign by Kentucky ex-legislator, Harry Caudill; and the expression of a need for a reinstatement of diversity in human life by changing the goal of progress to quality rather than quantity by Rene Dubos. Panel discussions groups included such dignitaries as Mr. Roy Sowers, Chairman of the State Department of Conservation and Development; Attorney General Robert Morgan's Ocean Law Consultant, Thomas Caine; and Tenth District Congressman, James T. Broyhill.

The major theme recurrent in the Challenge '71 was the need for individual involvement and concern over environmental problems. The idea of a Challenge program was a result of a 1964 bull session at WFU. The Wake Forest students saw a need for a greater involvement with the problems that face mankind. Challenge is now held every other year at the Winston-Salem school.

Eighty-three schools in the Eastern United States were invited to attend this year's program. The participation of these schools was light, but the program accomplished its goal of instilling in its participants a compassion and understanding needed, in facing up to solving problems.
