District 29 Officials

The past several basketball games that ACC has played, have been a little onesided. The opposing team has had five ball players and two officials to ACC's five players.

This editorialist has been to all the games except the N. C. State game, where tickets were scarce and seats plentiful. Some of the calls made by the District 29 officials have been unbelievable. A perfect example was the game with Methodist, where officials watched ACC players shoot the ball and then called three seconds on some other player on our side. To make it simple, call a foul on ACC for three seconds instead of looking for the fouls committed by the opposing team.

In some of the games we have played, our players needed shoulderpads to shake off the blocks thrown by the opposing team. These fouls were also overlooked by our blind officials.

Everyone knows how easy it is to make a mistake, also how easy it is to condemn someone else for a mistake, but why so many in a row? What happened to nonpartisan, fairly called games?

The officials have a habit of calling games against ACC, as any upperclassman can testify to.

This year, we have a new coach, new players and new plays to learn but, what about some new officials? Our new team is going to lose some games, and it doesn't need the old officials to help them along. The team needs support from the students and faculty.

Tonight is our first home game of the season and the officials of District 29 will no doubt be up to their usual tricks. When this happens, let the officials know that you don't agree with the calls. Get up and yell and also let the team know that you are behind them. Winning teams get their fans' support and they also get their fans' support when they lose. Win or lose, our team needs our support, so let's give it to them!!

Were You There?

The students on this campus are noted for their outspoken views and criticism of the administration and faculty of Atlantic Christian College. However, after last week's faculty forum the reverse should be true. The forum had been designed to let the study body express its views on various subjects and then let the faculty comment.

A strange thing happened — or was it strange — only 12 of the 1,750 students showed up, while 34 of the 120 faculty and administration attended. It appears that if 28 per cent of the college's staff can afford to give up their valuable time to listen to student complaints those students should have the courtesy to at least show up.

Actually, the only thing the meeting proved was that apathy had returned to the campus or had it really left? In the future when a student finds something he or she dislikes, they should keep it to themselves, and not complain unless they plan to follow it up — it is apparent that most of the students here are all bark and no bite. So fellow students, the next time you want to complain about the teachers who read their lectures, not having unlimited cuts, library hours, or the not so uniformed grading system, do not, unless you were there.

Keeping Face

Apathy here is of major concern. Not only is it the attitude of the student at large but also of the administration. Girls of the New Dorm have thoughts of a boycott next semester until their room rates are lowered. The common answer in these cases is "You didn't have to live here." This is known as a copout.

The fact that a dorm is new doesn't necessarily mean that it is a privilege to live there. The residents of the New Dorm should not have to pay for the defects in workmanship which have too frequently plagued this black sheep.

Maybe it is time for these residents to open the eyes of the administration. Maybe it is time for the administration to admit the mistakes of the New Dorm, to lose face and lower the cost of living in the New Dorm.

Faulty Expenditures

The Atlantic Christian Bulldogs have recently opened their basketball season. The Bulldogs started off on the right foot by winning the first game at N. C. Wesleyan, but then dropped the next three. The Bulldogs are at home tonight, hosting Elon College.

You might not know that the basketball season has started, since the only coverage of ACC was last Friday night, when the Bulldogs played N. C. State. The games are not being broadcast this year on WGTm radio. The main reason for this is that former A.D. Ira Norfolk sold time to the sponsors. This year WGTm has found they cannot sell time for ACC basketball games. Besides that the scores can only be found in the Wilson Daily Times the next day. Local TV stations have not given postgame scores until the NCSU game.

It's bad enough that the media pays more attention to Lee Knipe in Snow Hill than to ACC, but it seems that our cheerleaders could put more effort in the support of the team. We supposedly have boy cheerleaders this year, but they have yet to cheer. The reason they didn't cheer at NCSU is because some were too inebriated to stand up.

The cheerleaders have recently acquired a 140 per cent increase in their budget. This increase was to have covered the cost of new uniforms that have yet to be worn, uniforms for the boys and the rest was to cover the cost in traveling. They weren't at High Point last Monday night. They must have spent that $1,200.00 in a hurry.

Last year when I cheered there were 14 of us evenly matched. We had a budget of $500.00 and didn't spend all of that. We budgeted our time and money, and if I do say so myself, we looked pretty damned good. Some of the girls on this year's squad are sincere while others are out for self-glorification. They are doing a gross injustice to the name of the college and to the student body.

The cheerleaders should not come under the heading of the SGA but should be a part of the Athletic Department, budgeted by this department. Election of head cheerleader should not be a popularity contest but the cheerleaders should vote among themselves for the top position.

This year's squad emphasizes the inadequate ability of mature young students to represent the school in sports. Their increase in the budget exemplifies the gross amount of apathy on and around the campus.

Day In A Life

A day in the life of you guys when all of a sudden the hair on your face suddenly turned to, NO! Could it be?! Yes! Peach Fuzz!! Oh, Glorious Hour Oh, Happy Day !! Puberty has finally struck.

I bet most of you went through some of the same mishaps that Andy Adolescence did. From that day he found peach fuzz, Andy shaved avidly twice a day, hoping those blond hairs would turn black. But alack, they only turned mousey brown.

Andy decided that since he was "man enough to grow long hairs on his face" that it was time he had a girlfriend. So, suavely he called Molly Mingle asked her to go out to eat and to a movie. Andy took Molly to a steak house and when he was cutting his steak his fork slid across his garden peas and they shot across the table and into Molly's lap. He was mortified to say the least.

To top that incident, the only movie playing was "Carmen Baby". Thinking it was a Spanish comedy he took her in. Two hours later they came out. "There were more nude bodies in the movie than in the last issue of Playboy!" Andy exclaimed. Molly was not impressed. Her mortified look was frozen on her face.

He took her home and at the door attempted a kiss good night just like he had seen Rick Nelson do the night before. Only she kept her mouth closed.

What a fantastic failure this night was. Poor Andy Adolescence realized, painfully, what adolescence was all about.

As the weeks went by, Andy reluctantly admitted he'd never have hair on his chest, a fate worse than death. Since it was embarrassing to undress in PE, Andy goes into one of his sisters' make-up and pulls out one of those pencils. He tip toes into his room and in front of the mirror, draws lines that resemble hairs. As long as he can fake a shower so his "hairs" don't smear, he'll be considered manly by his friends.

The older Andy becomes, the more he realizes what this thing called puberty is.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

Tuesday night around 7:15 a rather unfortunate and quite possibly an unnecessary accident happened here on the grounds of our campus. One of Atlantic Christian's female students was attacked behind Harper Hall by two male adults. Perhaps now the Administration and Trustees will open their eyes and see the need for a more sophisticated system of security here at A. C. C.

In our years of study here at Atlantic Christian we have seen many important areas of this college develop with the changing times. However, while these areas have been pushed toward advancement we, the students and administration, have failed to push for the advancement of our security system. Atlantic Christian has now reached a size that is necessary to have a very good security system. We, the students, and they, the administration, need to find the answers to the problems of security and solve them quickly and efficiently in order to discourage such bizarre incidents from happening again.

The Student Government Association met October 20 in an open session. This called meeting was about the security problem on our campus. During this meeting a motion was made and passed stating a desire for a special committee to be formed to look into the security problem of our school. This motion was to be passed on to the Trustees for further action.

The Trustee Meeting was held October 22 and this motion was presented to them for further action. However, Chairman Hackney has not followed up on this motion as he has not appointed two members of the Board of Trustees to sit on this committee. This committee was to be formed and supposedly they were to report monthly their findings on the security problem. It has now been over a month and the committee has not even been formed. We believe that Chairman Hackney should fulfill his job and get this action underway immediately.

Atlantic Christian College has stressed the fact to prospective students that we are a community of advancements and opportunities. The catalogue stresses the fact that the college is here to give everyone who desires the highest possible academic program. So now let us add to this aim. We also guarantee the highest possible protective program to our students who strive to gain this higher education.

Thank you,
The Brotherhood
