New Housing Policy at AC Features 'Dual-Sex' Dorm

By Stan Melhaus

A change in on-campus housing that will affect both men and woman is planned for the fall semester, according to Alvah Monshower, dean of men.

Caldwell Hall, the oldest residence hall on campus and currently a men's dorm will become a girl's dorm in the fall. Waters Hall, originally built for men but now housing women, will be given back to the men.

The big switch, however, involves Hackney hall, a men's dorm. According to Monshower, "Hackney will be a 'dual-sex dorm.' You can't call it a co-ed dorm because that implies that girls and guys are up there living together, and that's not the case here," he said. "There are going to be certain areas for girls, and certain areas for guys, and these areas will be off-limits to members of the opposite sex except during visitation."

As in the case with many changes on campus this year, the decision to re-assign dormitories is money-motivated. There are five male annexes operating around the campus, and Monshower noted, "These annexes are sub-standard and expensive. The annexes are marginal at best, and they have a lot of maintenance problems. It will save us at least $30,000 a year to close down these annexes, and we can provide the men who are living in them with equal housing next fall."

Money is not the only reason for the dormitory adjustments. The demand for men's housing increased this fall, while the demand for women's housing has decreased. This led to a shortage of beds in men's dorms and a surplus of beds in women's dorms. "Instead of forcing the guys to move off campus and forbidding the girls to leave, we decided to switch the dorms around and try to give everybody what they want," said Monshower.

Although no definite criteria has been established for getting a room in Hackney, upper classmen will probably be given preference, and then sophomores with 3.0 grade point averages. Incoming male freshmen will be housed in Waters, which, because of air conditioning, costs $25 more per semester than Hackney. Monshower said that applications for on-campus housing, roommates, etc...will be available to students in a few weeks.

The dorm changes eliminate some problems while creating a few others. It will be easier for girls to get permission to live off-campus, and guys will have an air conditioned dorm. The men living in annexes will have equal housing, and most importantly, the college will save $30,000. However, it will be harder for guys to get permission to live off-campus (since more beds will be available to them). Also, Waters has a combination lock on the door, and the men who live there will have to get used to that. More security will have to be provided for the girls who live in Hackney.

"I think it's a good idea," commented Monshower. "I think the students here are mature enough to handle it." Monshower also noted that the "dual-sex" idea is being used only on a trial basis, and if it does not work, it can always be changed.
