To park or not to park

Are you a student driver who is fed up with Bennett College's parking system? If you're nodding your head in agreement you're not the only one.

Time and time again many drivers are feeling frustrated by the limited areas that we are allowed to park in. Because the city has put up more tow-away zones around the campus it has only added to the fuel.

Currently students are paying $15 to park on campus. Which leads me to this question: Are we paying for the privileges of parking spaces on campus or are we paying to hunt for a parking space?

Many of us at some point have already received illegal parking violations on our windshields thanks to Bennett College's finest Pinkerton Security System.

As student drivers we only have two areas to park on campus: East Washington Street and Black Hall. For those who arrive to campus late in the evening, East Washington Street is pretty scary at night especially when lights over there are still dim and security is pretty scarce.

As for Black Hall, most of the parking spaces are filled to capacity by noon and because the gates close at 8 p.m. it makes it hard on those who might have plans for later that evening. So what is the solution?
