Bennett College has taken one giant step or maybe two baby steps forward in trying to assist in the progression of potential single parents seeking educational opportunities.

This step will be known as the Bennett College Challenge of Opportunity or the Single Parent program.

Riley Kline, director of Outreach Services, said, "The Challenge of Opportunity will benefit to students who want their children to be closer to them while they are in school."

The Bennett College Health Care Services Project (BCHCSP) will provide an intervention program for single mothers which will allow the single parents to finish their post-secondary education either with an associate or bachelor's degree in the particular field of their choice.

"We started this program in August 1993, and it seems to be working out just fine," Kline said.

The Single Parent

program will assist participants by enrolling their children, ages 3 to 5, in Bennett's Children's House at no expense to the participants. The Children's House is an early development childhood educational center.

The participants will be required to be in a parenting program, a required sex education program, and in a home management program to learn the development and implementations of a healthy home environment. Students will also be engage in appropriate work experiences.

BCHCSP targets its population on women who want to improve their quality of life, to become self sufficient and who want an education for them and their families. A common recreational and program facility will accommodate the single parents and their children with an on-site professional staff.

Sabra Ferreira, student intern, said, "The Program is very beneficial and it is coming along better each day."

The programs services will have a social worker with will provide management services to program participants.

Anita Hairston, student participant, said, "This is a great program and I recommend it to anyone trying to continue in getting the rest of their education."

The Single Parent Program currently eight students are enrolled. The program is accepting applications for the next semester.

North Carolina will soon be connected by a series of information highway that will revolutionize, education, scientific research, and communication and just about every other industry.

These "Information

Super Highways" and their effect on computational science, was the focus of this year's Annual Science Convocation Jan. 27, in the Annie Merner Pfeiffer Chapel.

The Information Highway will enable students to take courses on other campuses while they are still on their own campus.

Using cameras and mics, which will be set up at each of the 106 sites, the students will be able to hear and see the teachers as well as communicate with them. This process will also allow the teacher to see and communicate with the students as well.

"An important point is that scientist located at great distance from each other can use Information Highway that are being developed to conduct collaborative complete scientific research as through they were all in the same laboratory, said Dr. Lee

Ponting, associate professor of Mathematics and Physics.

The Science Division theme for this year, "What's Research Got To Do With It," may leave many wondering, but after the annual science convocation the students were told that research has everything to do with it.
