QUOTABLES

A library is:

- The delivery room for the birth of ideas-a place where history comes to life. Norman Cousins
- The diary of the human race. George Dawson
- A place where the lofty spirits of all nations and generations meet. Samuel Niger
- Friendship for Libraries is enlightened self-interest. Barbara Tuchman
- My library shall be for all, rich or poor, without distinction of race or color. Enoch Pratt

A brief library dictionary

A reference source is consulted for aid or information on a subject, an event, a person, a date or a place. Reference books, because of their organization and arrangement are excellent for quick and easy use. They are written to be referred to for pieces of information rather than to be read completely. Your trip to Holgate will be easier if you are familiar with the definitions and examples of some general reference books:

Almanac- originally a projection of the coming year-days, months, holidays, and weather forecasts-is the name now given to a collection of miscellaneous facts and statistical information

Atlas- a volume of maps, plates, or charts, with or without explanatory text

Bibliography- list of books and other materials which have some relationship to each other

Biographical Dictionary- a collection of sketches of varying lengths about the lives of individuals, arranged alphabetically by surname

Dictionary- provides information about words-meaning, derivation, spelling, pronunciation, syllabication, usage and current status

Directory- lists the names and addresses of persons, organizations or institutions; it may also provide other pertinent information such as the purposes, the dues, and the officers of organizations

Encyclopedia- gives an overview of a topic, including definition, description, background and bibliographical references

Index- points out where information can be found

Yearbook- often called an annual presents the events of the past year in brief, concise form

Spring is here

 Pollen affects everyone differently.

"The pollen sets of my allergies, my glands get swollen," said Dyora Kinsey a freshman from Yokota, Japan.

"I get runny eyes which leads to disturbances of my asthma," Kinsey said.

Valeria Day, a freshman from

Washington, D.C., said that she seems to be bothered by the pollen more so than ever because of her new environment.

"I suffer from constant headaches, and runny eyes," Day said.

There is no way to eliminate pollen, but according to Cora Waddell, the registered nurse at the campus health center, students can get prescription medication to help decrease the symptoms.

Speaker's message

 The minister also told the audience about an imaginary long distance phone call that he made to God, and during the conversation, several biblical figures came to the phone.

"Rev. Crider kept my attention," said Kaetina Davis, senior mass communications major from Columbia S.C.

"He has been one of the greatest speakers since I have been here at Bennett."

Crider closed by challenging students to get in touch with Jesus so that they may know their mission and then complete that mission.

"You're here to fulfill your purpose and to be equipped for that mission," he said.
