More than 40 students and 10 entrepreneurs attended the 2nd annual Business Belles hosted by the Chi Gamma Chapter of Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. Sept. 22.

"Business Belles is an event that allows Bennett Belles the opportunity to display their talents and prove that we are businesslike, also," said Belinda Speller, a senior biology major from Manhattan, N.Y. Speller is also president of the chapter.

Business Belles originated as a service project and has flourished into a profitable business opportunity for the students who showcased their talents. To aid in the unveiling of these talents and hobbies LaShaun Willis, a senior chemistry major from Washington, D.C. did an original cut and curl hairstyle on one of her featured models.

Willis, also, featured a braided hairstyle with the model's real hair.

Camisha Gentry, a senior mass communications major from San Francisco displayed her portraits on a table for all to see. Gentry also took orders for Black Heritage Products, products made for Blacks by Blacks.

A display table was set up so that patrons could test the oils and ask specific questions on the proper usage of the products.

Camille Overton, a senior biology major from Washington, D.C. was also among the 10 entrepreneurs to showcase her hairstyling talents. Overton featured a pin-up and a cut and curl hairstyle.

"Business Belles is all about economic development and seeing women as entrepreneurs, a part of the Seven Point Plan given to us by International Grand Basileus, Barbara West Carpenter," said Millie West, a senior biology major from New Orleans.

This was a way to combine social life with academic life, and sorority life on Bennett's campus," said Candle Hudson, a junior psychology major from Chicago.

How to avoid being taken to the cleaners

(NAPS)—Cutting down on trips to the dry cleaners can save time and money. Here are some tips:

- Blot up spills before they soak in.
- Air clothes before returning them to the closet.
- Use a clothes brush to remove lint and dust.
