vides students with an educational experience to enhance students' knowledge of international events and parliamentary procedure.

"You are exposed to teamwork, foreign affairs, and the operations of the U.N.," said Willacin V. Gholston, Political Pacesetters president, junior, political science major from Indiana.

"Participants also learn how current events affect citizens of the world."

Bennett students will represent six delegations: Bahrain, Brazil, Cuba, France, Kenya and Portugal.

"Model U.N. enhances students knowledge of world affairs, different positions of the U.N. and different issues while assuming roles of delegates from various countries," said Yolanda Butler, vice president of Political Pacesetters and junior political science major from Philadelphia. Gholston and Butler said that campus participation and enthusiasm is a major factor in the success of hosting Model U.N.

Students will also serve in other capacities. Violet Baffour, sophomore political science major from Ghana, will serve as Deputy Secretary General. Other students will perform as moderators for the conference.
