UNSCRAMBLED EGGS— Post war marketeers will buy eggs with the yolks and whites already separated, says DuPont. Dehydration and compression will permit whites, yolks and whole eggs to be packed together in one "utility" package for convenience in cake and custard making.

MATERIALS— Civilian motorists can expect some 22,000,000 more tires this year, for essential use only. . . . Observers who've been looking forward to increased stocks of rayon yarn are apparently only "whistling in the dark". At this writing supplies are as tight as ever. . . . Metal casket makers are looking gloomy again, since hope for steel supplies have failed to materialize. . . . Look for a big increase in the number of "wrapped in cellophane" products after the war: A few possibilities: (1) Nylon stockings; (2) sirloin steaks; (3) compressed coffee and eggs; (4) individually wrapped doses of bicarbonate of soda.

TRANSPORTATION— Critical manpower shortages, still throwing a monkey wrench into railroad traffic schedules, are delaying hundreds of trains a month. . . . Requests for truck and bus replacement parts are pouring into the ODT at the rate of almost 2,000 every month.
