

Camera Club Members Are Versatile

The fascinating thing about photography is that the world is your "beat", as the term is used in journalism, and whatever catches your fancy is yours for the snapping of the shutter.

Members of the Camera Club here are characteristic of this versatility of photographers. At the right, Frank Ferrell, a comparative new-comer to the field, has taken a wonderful portrait of his four year old daughter, Betsy. Portraiture requires careful planning, good lighting, and most of all a good subject which Frank found without going out of his house.

Below, Martha Sellers has given us a good example of a "chance" shot she ran across on a hike. She has aptly titled it "The Last Mile," and judging from the condition of the shoes, a better name could not have been chosen for the picture.

On Tuesday night, March 16, the Club members went to Asheville for a tour through the Asheville Citizen-Times Engraving Department.

Above: "Betsy" By Frank Ferrell

Below: "The Last Mile" By Martha Sellers

