More than half of the total land area of the Philippines, more than 43 million acres, is thickly forested with no fewer than one thousand different varieties of valuable hardwood. This is the world's largest stand of virgin timber. Some trees grow 250 feet tall and are so large in girth that a single cross-section provides the top for a dining table large enough to seat twenty persons.

Some women do housework with the skill and economy of effort worthy of an artist.
