

Happy Vacation

Some wisemen believe that the greatest shock in life to the nervous system occurs when man comes into the world. It's such a change!

Some other wisemen believe this to be untrue. The average man usually comes into this world only once, and he has small memory of the occasion.

A greater shock to the nervous system than birth is coming back to work after a vacation. Medical science has done much to retrieve the suffering of mankind, but it has done nothing to cushion the mental suffering a man undergoes at having to return to his job after one or two care-free weeks at the beach, in the mountains, or driving along one of the winding arteries of our highway system.

This is the most cruel ordeal inflicted by a heartless civilization.

The poor guy lies shivering in his bed as the alarm clock calls for him to rise and go to work. Madly he tries to crawl deeper under the cover and back into his dreams, hoping that something will happen—anything, anything to just stay joy-

(Continued on page 8)

At Camp Harry H. Straus.