

Can't
reduce taxes

without cutting
spending
too

government.

We can make sizeable savings by limiting military expenditures to what is essential, but to reach that $50 billion expenditure goal we must also sacrifice many of the "handout" programs favoring some groups of citizens at the expense of the general taxpayer.

WON'T BE EASY

Such a Federal retrenchment program will not be easy. But we can achieve it if we insist on the kind of expenditure and tax reduction that will strengthen the U. S. and enable us to spend our money as we want to and not have the government spend so much of it for us.

JOHN W. HANES is Chairman of the Tax Foundation. A former Under Secretary of the Treasury, he was Chairman of the Hoover Commission's "Task Force" on budgeting, accounting, and fiscal procedures. He is Financial Vice President, a member of the Executive Committee and a Director of Olin Industries, Inc., and President of the Ecusta Paper Corporation. This article was prepared for publication in the Hearst papers.