

Residence Regulations Unique; Self Sufficiency Is Guideline

Life in the Asheville - Biltmore Dormitories is a "unique experiment in individual living." That is to say, it is presenting unique problems in individual living. And so we present ten rules for greater efficiency of avoiding undue distress.

(1) Beware of loose closet rods, or someday you may find yourself buried beneath a mound of clothes.

(2) Beware of the mud puddles that form after the weekly monsoon. They have a rather disturbing tendency to swallow people.

(3) Fear not the small (?), brown, furry creatures that are beginning to frequent the dorms. Higher-ups have informed us that these were not (HORROR!) rats, but merely dormitory rats, a new type of exchange student.

(4) Dance, drink and be merry, for tomorrow you may lose your Brown Bagging Permit.

(5) Thou shalt sweep thy dirt floor daily.

(6) Thou shalt never answer the phone . . . leave that for the other guy.

(7) Thou shalt not bow down to the cafeteria staff, even if they do lower the food prices.

(8) Honor thy father and thy mother . . . then ask them for $20.

(9) Thou shalt not take thy roommate's last cigarette.

(10) Thou shalt not fatigue thyself by walking across campus to see if the cafeteria is open . . . because usually it isn't.

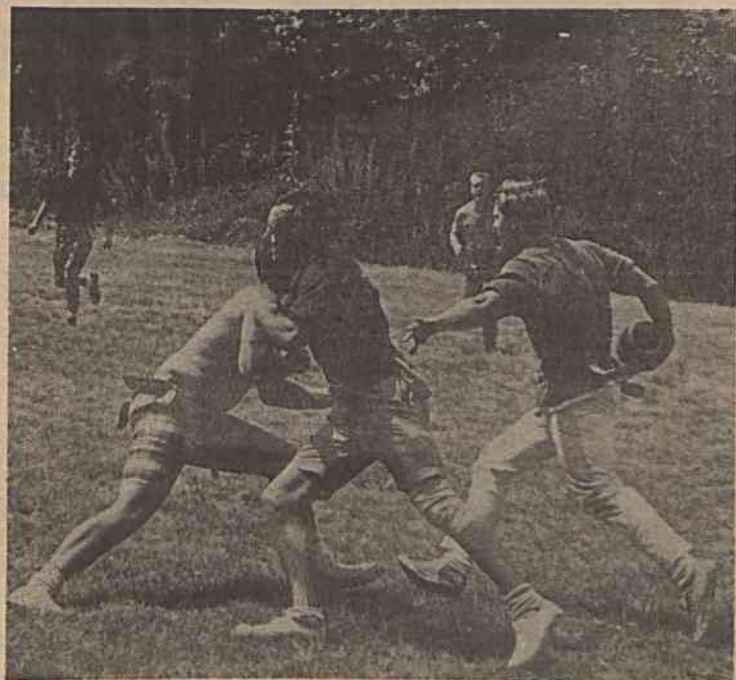

Shorb Not Starched; Rx Is Stiff Upper Lip

Mrs. Marjorie Shorb, registered nurse, though she wears the starched white, is not "starched" in her reaction to students. She is a vital and dynamic person -- one to whom students can go for aspirin, an Ace bandage, or a prescription for severe homesickness.

She is the nurse on duty from nine in the morning until one p.m. in the Central Hall of A-B's Dormitory Village.

Most college nurses have certain hours when they do needed paperwork and cannot see students, but Mrs. Shorb doesn't think there is enough such work to keep her from being "available to students at all times during the four hours I am here. I hope the students will drop by to see me," says Mrs. Shorb.

Plans are in the process for an infirmary and although nothing is final Mrs. Shorb hopes that it will include facilities for several patients and "the typical A-B coffee pot!"

Lamba Upsets Upsilon

Sigma Lambda Chi captain Bob Templeton streaks past the Sigma Delta Upsilon offense, on his way to insuring a Lambda Chi victory. Alan Mayes blocks for Templeton: Final score in the September 6 intramural contest was Chi 13-Upsilon 7. The last game of the series was held September 13 with Lambda Chi versing A Dorm. Chi triumphed again, 25-6.

but even in that area the incidents are minor.

No figures are available for A-B College student violators because addresses in the past have always been a home rather than the college address, he explained.

"With the new dormitories this year perhaps we will have some statistics next year, but we hope not," Hall said.

As A-B College continues to grow does the Asheville Police Department expect an increase in campus policing?

"Like Berkley?-- let's hope not!" Hall said.
