

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dearest Editor:

As I gaze through blurred angry, eyes, I see the clock shouting 1:58 a.m. at me. The dorm is silent as my pen should be; however, what I wish to say to you must be said now while it is still clear in my mind. I have procrastinated this letter for several weeks, but tonight's event brought those of the past to mind. I feel that the following events require the attention of SOMEBODY.

I returned to the dorm village around 1:15 after spending six final hours on my literature paper. Walking back from Lipinsky with cold fingers stiff from typing, I knew the dorm would be locked. After searching in vain for an awake resident to let me in, I resorted to asking the security guard on duty to let me in. I asked him very politely, complete with "please," only to be glared at and rudely "Yeah." (If my boyfriend had not been standing behind me, I would probably be writing you from outside my dorm.) My escort attempted pleasant small talk walking to the dorm; I pleasantly said, "Thank you. Goodnight." He not only did not answer me but let the door close loudly behind me. So ends Event Number I.

In an effort to supplant my income, I worked nights until 3:00 a.m. As the security guard escorted me to my dorm to let me in, he recited the following lines: "This is not my ball of wax, letting you girls in after hours. You are going to have to decide whether your want to be in or out of the dorm between 1 and 6 a.m. ..." His sharp words continued, but I don't remember any more. That was enough. He (incidentally, the same guard as tonight) was very rude and succeeded in making me feel small and troublesome. Also, I know girls who have had to sit in Vance Hall until the guard decided to let her in her dorm; another girl sat on the wall next to her dorm until she could wake someone in the dorm to let her in. So end Events II, III, and IV.
