

Gaslight Tour A Success

Over the Christmas holidays from December 28 to January 8, the University of North Carolina at Asheville sponsored "A Gaslight Tour of London" reminiscing the romantic Victorian England of Charles Dickens' time. For the nine people who went on the trip, the experience was memorable -- but not in the way that you might think! For starters, England was experiencing its worst winter since 1916 and the bitter cold and deep snow hampered sightseeing. Also, several of London's attractions were closed to the weather. A snowy England wasn't as romantic as it sounds. Perhaps "The Dickens' Hard Times Tour of London" would have been more apt than "A Gaslight Tour of London."

Fortunately, the trip wasn't a total waste, for the group under the direction of Dr. Richard Reed of U.N.C.-A.'s Literature Department did get to visit some of Dickens' favorite restaurants and pubs, as well as the ancient city of Bath and medieval Hampton Court. The group also saw several excellent theatre productions, including "Canterbury Tales" and "Oliver." In addition, members of the tour were able to visit London's cathedrals, Dickens' home and Dickens' Museum, or just to do some shopping in London stores. Indeed, "A Gaslight Tour of London" was an unusual experience.
