able to walk on water" with community leaders, faculty, the board of trustees, students, administration, the state legislature, minority leaders, and the general administration in Chapel Hill, Rackham said.

Rackham hopes to complete the final interview by April 25.

Rackham said he didn't know when a final decision would be announced, "but our goal is by the end of the school year."

Of the final four candidates, "no fewer than two and no more than three will be sent to William Friday," president of the 16 public colleges in North Carolina, for a final decision.

Arnold said he hopes to present the candidates to Friday at the May 11 UNC Board of Governors meeting.

If not May, then the June Board of Governors meeting would be the latest presentation date "unless some hitch appears, such as one of the candidates accepting a post elsewhere," said Arnold.

With Friday's approval, a recommendation will be sent to the Board of Governors for approval.

By the time the choice is made, each candidate "will have been interviewed by more than 75 people for over 30 hours. It's a grueling, but exciting process," said Rackham.

Flynn is quick to defend the cafeteria and notes the many improvements, including an ice cream machine, microwave oven, and stereo.

Other improvements are on the way said Flynn. "Next year the dessert area will be moved and a grill put in. Hamburgers and hot dogs will be grilled at lunch, and eggs and omelets will be cooked to order. Another ice cream machine will be added also," said Flynn.

In addition, students may use their meal tickets in the snack bar next year.

One thing students can do to make the program better is to not waste food said Flynn.

"I see people who take eight glasses of milk and throw six away. The worst are probably freshmen. They are overwhelmed by the all-you-can-eat program and get more than they can eat," said Flynn.

Another way to make the program better is for students to join the Food Service Committee. The committee is a group of 15 to 20 students who discuss ideas and problems about the food with Flynn.

"When I get complaints I am not going to retaliate against them. I will try to make changes," said Flynn.

Denver Ingram is one student who isn't complaining. "Overall I'm very pleased with the food. I was here when we had the old cafeteria in Lipinsky and this cafeteria is 100 times better," said Ingram.

Sophomore Kim Neubauer said she "has tasted a helluva a lot worse." But she also added, "How many ways can they keep disguising broccoli?"

Flynn said he understands students complaining about the monotony of the food.

The cafeteria has begun to sponsor special nights to combat this problem.

These have included: "Make Your Own Sundae Night", "Cheese and Crackers Night", and "Colorado Cut Steak Night."

The school regulates the cafeteria hours said Flynn. "If you have a class conflict then I will work with you to find a convenient time for you to eat," he said.

Next year the cafeteria will remain open over three day holidays for students who cannot black Datsun 280Z," said Carreno.

Carreno received no reports of theft, but Mann heard rumours of missing items.

"I later heard there were some clothes stolen from the laundry room on the first floor," said Mann.

Vickie Looper-June, housing director, said many students have a false sense of security.

"People have really bad (security) habits. Many, especially the guys, don't lock their doors at night," said Looper-June.

The first floor doors of the residence hall are locked from 4 p.m. to 6 a.m. every day and a resident advisor is on duty in the lobby area of the Highrise from 4 p.m. until midnight, said Looper-June.

"Night assistants are also on duty in the lobby area of the Highrise from midnight until 6 a.m. when all the doors are unlocked.

"But this guy probably walked in after the doors were unlocked," she said.

go home.

Overall Flynn appears satisfied with the service the cafeteria provides. "I think students eat better here on a whole than they do at home. Where else can they get salad, an entree, and dessert for lunch and dinner?" said Flynn.
