A delightful tea was given later in the afternoon at West Hall, during which an amusing program was given under the direction of Jack Taggart, master of ceremonies.

The second debate was with Bard College, a branch of Columbia University. The visitors, William Jordy, Dalton McBee, and Louis Koenig, were the opponents of Turner Feezor, Horace Raper, and Charles Woodson. Odell Salmon acted as chairman, and Geraldine DeVier was secretary. Instead of rebuttal there was open discussion from the floor, and no decision was rendered.
