Students Give Large Amount For Destitute

In response to a spirited plea by President E. J. Coltrane during the assembly period on Monday, January 25, the students and faculty of Brevard College contributed one hundred and ten dollars to the Red Cross campaign for the relief of persons suffering from the flood in the Ohio River valley.

Mr. Coltrane gave a graphic description of the intense suffering and hardships caused by the flood and asked the students to deny themselves some luxury or necessity in order to be of service to their fellow men.

To the Editor Of the "Clarion"

"When I [grew up] I put away childish things."

Dear Editor:

Last fall I had the pleasure of seeing an intercollegiate basketball game at High Point College. It was a very exciting game, as the score was close and both teams appeared to be evenly matched. Although I do not remember which team won, I do remember a very striking thing about some of the students. Just as the game was about to begin a large group of the college girls came in and, after seating themselves, proceeded to start knitting. On first thought this seemed very silly and absurd, but perhaps they were learning a useful hobby and using their time wisely.

It is said that most small girls like to play with dolls and play housekeeping. No one notices this, and perhaps it is helpful training.

One very cool morning this week I saw a very striking thing on our campus. A small group of girls appeared in our classes dressed in white and carrying most tenderly a small dog. The kind of clothes we wear is a personal matter, and with students like me what we wear is limited. How we use our time and the way we act during our early life determine our later life to a great extent. "As the twig is bent so the tree grows."

The most of us came to school to get training that would be useful to us in the future. Ten years from now most of our careers will have been determined. I wonder if we will be traveling down this trail of life with our head high in the air and a little poodle under one arm? Will our hobby then be taking little "Fifi" out for a stroll?

Perhaps today would be a good time to take inventory and not only start selling our "childish things" but start stocking with merchandise we intend to use tomorrow. It is, to say the least, worth a thought!

Yours truly,

Two residents of Taylor Hall
