Many Changes Made In College Library

Have you visited the library recently? Freshmen will find the library a quiet and comfortable place to study. Sophomores will find that many changes have been made since last year.

The library received approximately six hundred and seventy-five books during the three summer months. The books cover the subjects English, history, music, government, physical education, social studies, biology, art and religion.

After being open to the students for one year, the library found a need for rearrangement of the books and furniture. The card catalog has been moved closer to the check-out desk in order to give more room for a study area. In the reference area, tables have been placed between each row of books in order for student to be closer to the needed materials.

An area in the rear of the library has been reserved for short stories. More shelf space was added to the fiction and biography sections. The Q books or oversize books and new books have been placed in a browsing area.

Upstairs the books have been rearranged so as to give more shelf space.

A new school year often carries with it a number of novel ideas and new faces. Many new faces were noticed those first hectic days of classes. The most noticeable were the new faculty. The Clarion introduces our new faculty at Brevard College:

He is a graduate of Catawba College, East Carolina University, and was a visiting instructor at Appalachian State University where he did graduate study. He also received a grant for graduate study in France. Mr. Sinclair says he is "in love with the school and community after just two weeks."

A. in English from Furman University. Mrs. Miller completed work for her M.A. in English at Appalachian State University. A bride of one month, Mrs. Miller met her husband while performing with the Brevard Little Theatre. As the semester progresses, Mrs. Miller hopes there will be an increased interest in drama work and the fine productions planned for presentation on our campus.

Students Assume Control Of Campus Coffee House

Zen Den, the Saturday night coffee house formerly sponsored by the Canterbury Club, is now being changed into a student-sponsored and student-led activity. This announcement was made by Mrs. Walker, the club's sponsor, last Saturday during preparation for the first Zen Den, which featured the Peace Core.

From now on, Mrs. Walker said, students will plan and direct the activity, which includes choosing the entertainment and cleaning up afterward. A president is soon to be chosen to head the new organization.

The first Zen Den enjoyed only a modest success, but with the help and cooperation of the entire student body, this year's could be the greatest ever.

THE NEW A. G. MYERS CAFETERIA

New Dining Facility Gives New Touch To College Campus

Everyone seems to agree that the new A. G. Myers Dining Hall is a wonderful new addition to our expanding campus. A lovely, modern building, it has already proved to be a valuable asset to students and faculty alike.

Besides a spacious main dining room, two private dining rooms are available to student groups for meetings or special occasions. This facility will make dinner meetings and lunch-time discussions, such as the ones conducted by the religion department last year, much more enjoyable.

Mrs. Cox and her staff are most pleased with the new building. When asked to name the one greatest improvement over the old dining hall, Mrs. Cox singled out the use of two serving lines as a great time-saver for everyone. "We want students to enjoy our new dining hall and make use of the private dining room."

Freshmen and sophomores alike are enthusiastic about the short length of time it takes to be served. Some of the other comments include "... no other college has such good food" and "I love the orange juice." One co-ed liked the meal tickets because she could prove to her mother that she had been eating!
