

Language Department Has New Laboratory Program

The Language Department headed by Mr. Perez, has a new language laboratory. These "labs" are run by laboratory assistants who are of great help to the students. The assistants are students who are fairly adept in the language. The lab is designed with individual compartments with a microphone, set of earphones, and dials to adjust the instruments.

The lab program is set up in three divisions or stages. In the first stage, the student listens to a tape and then speaks back and records in his own voice. His voice is recorded on a tape so that he can listen to himself talk the language.

In the second stage the student will just listen to tapes. In this way the student becomes better acquainted with the language and gains more understanding.

The third stage is designed more for pleasure. This is the stage where the student can listen to records in the language he is taking. By listening to the music, he can get a better idea of the language.

Put these three stages together and one can see the advantages and effectiveness of a language laboratory.
