Business Courses Important

Have you wondered what you are going to do when you leave Brevard? Or what you'll do when you finish a four year school? If you are not certain about your course of study, the future can be discomfoting at times. Many areas of the job market are overcrowded already, and each year thousands more graduates add to the employment dilemma. You should explore the current opportunities in your field of interest before committing yourself fully.

Another valuable asset would be to have some secondary skills that could help you find an interim job, or just maybe give you that extra edge on the job race. Knowing how to type quickly and accurately will be beneficial no matter what profession you enter. Being able to operate office machines or take shorthand are more than just skills for secretaries. The complications of a business-oriented society make a background in economics or accounting a plus also.

So think about this when you register for courses next year and are planning your curriculum - am I presenting the best prepared and most salable self an employer could want? It's up to you.

Brevard College Students Are Number One.
