BC officials note academic progress

Dean of Student Affairs Don Scarborough affirms the good in the learning contracts, although he admits needs work. "It's a good idea. We are on our way to creating a system that will make the contract more functional." Scarborough sees a need for a better way to track violations of Uniform Guidelines in the system. Points are a heavy factor against students on the contract. Uniform guidelines are enforced very heavily, as always. Scarborough is optimistic about the program and what it can do. "Learning contracts just make it harder to ignore your academic responsibilities," he said.

Klingensmith teaches CPR

by Chris Harris

"Hi. I am a photographer from The Clarion and we'd like to use your picture with an article we're printing in the upcoming issue."

If you haven't heard that phrase yet, beware, because Brevard College freshman photographer, Eric Klingensmith, just might "get" you yet.

Eric, who shares Clarion photography duties with Faculty Advisor Jock Lauterer, began his career at Seminole High School in Sanford, Fla. as photographer for the school newspaper and yearbook. He also was a sports photographer for the city paper and is listed in Who's Who Among High School Students.

Eric's achievements don't stop there though, he's also a licensed cardiopulmonary-resuscitation instructor, in Florida and North Carolina.

When Eric learned CPR at the age of 11, his teachers felt he had great potential as a teacher himself so they urged him towards instructional classes.

Now he teaches at Transylvania Community Hospital and has been recently recertified to meet the new American Heart Association standards. He has just been inducted by the Transylvania County Heart Association and is now an official board member.

"If you have taken CPR in the last year or so you need to take a refresher course," says Eric. "And if you haven't had CPR then take it—you could save a life."
