New Restaurant Comes to Brevard

Jon Ostendorff
Editor

A new restaurant has recently opened in Brevard. However, this is not the typical small town biscuit and gravy dinner. The restaurant is called "Vinne Spaglionies", and it specializes in Latin food.

Daniel Martinez, a native of Miami FL., is the owner and operator of Vinne's. Martinez is a chef with almost twenty years of experience in the restaurant business. Martinez's background is almost as diverse as his menu. At Vinne's Martinez serves up food from Italy, Portugal, Spain, Columbia, and many other Latin Countries. However, Martinez has not always worked solely with Latin food. The first restaurant he opened was in Naples, FL., and was actually a German restaurant. With his previous restaurant experience, Martinez said he would have felt comfortable operating a typical small town diner, but instead he wanted to bring something different to Brevard.

Presently Vinne's is carry-out only, with a bicycle delivery service for lunch in the down town area only. However, in about a month Vinne's will offer indoor and outdoor sit-down dining.

When asked about future plans for Vinne Spaglionies, Martinez said "I feel this restaurant is going where Brevard is going. We don't have to be a big city to have culture and diversity."

Vinne Spaglionies is now accepting applications for all positions, part-time or full-time. Apply in person between 3:00 and 6:00 Mon.-Sat., at 10 Times Arcade Alley, behind the Chamber of Commerce or call 883-9401. Ask for Daniel.

Press Release
BC News Bureau

What could you do with ten or fifteen weeks in Washington, D.C.? Researching defense issues, tracking down crime-scene witnesses, or planning an after-school program for disadvantaged youth are all in a day's work for one group of students this semester. But being an intern is just the beginning. A myriad of monuments, museums, ethnic restaurants, festivals, and more ensure that every aspect of a semester in D.C. is unforgettable.

These U.S. and international students are spending a semester exploring career options and applying what they have learned in the classroom. They are learning about fields, organizations, and types of jobs which may hold the keys to their careers. The students are also receiving valuable real-life experience that will give their resumes an edge. They are experiencing life in our nation's capital and meeting people from across the U.S. and abroad.

The Institute for Experiential learning (IEL) is the organization that makes these exciting, affordable internships possible. IEL takes great care in locating internships for its students. Once a student has applied and been accepted, he or she completes an Intern Profile, which provides more insight into his or her goals and interests. IEL staff then circulate the student's application to potential Agency Sponsors throughout Washington. Finally, students conduct telephone interviews with two or more potential Agency Sponsors before choosing the internship that meets their individual needs.

Current placements range from the Department of Housing and Urban Development to the National Women's Law Center to Olympic Soccer '96 to congressional offices. IEL maintains listings for literally thousands of diverse organizations and continually seeks out more. No matter what a student's major and interests may be, IEL searches for the ideal internship.

IEL students intern 4 days a week. They also attend 2 seminars taught by IEL faculty. The Experiential Education Seminar links theory to practice, and the second course, an elective, varies by term.

To ensure that students have a safe, comfortable experience while interning, IEL offers affordable optional housing. Students can choose to live with other IEL interns in apartments that are convenient to life's necessities (grocery store, dry cleaners, restaurants). The apartment complex offers such amenities as a swimming pool, exercise room, movie nights, weekly brunch, and special events.

What are former IEL interns doing today? They are serving as congressional aides, preparing to become lawyers, anchoring the morning news, opening political fundraising businesses, and keeping in touch with the friends and contacts they made at IEL.

IEL is accepting applications until April 1. Undergraduates, recent graduates, and graduate students are welcome. For more information, call 1-800-IEL-0770.

Math Scholarships

Marla Malner
Staff Writer

Freshmen students who are presently following a math or science track could be eligible for a scholarship. The generous faculty and staff of the math and science division have personally donated the funds for this award. Together they have accumulated approximately $2,500.

The gifts will not be based entirely on academic performance, and the amount of each award depends on how many students apply.

If you are interested in applying for the scholarship, the deadline is Wednesday, March 6. Several students have already picked up their applications from Mrs. Whitmire. Her office is located in room 150A of the Bryan Moore Science Building.

Recipients will be announced May 1, 1996, at the Honors Day Ceremony.

The scholarship has been awarded for the past ten years. In the previous year five people received the scholarship.
