OPINION

Campus Voice:

What one thing would you do to change racism?

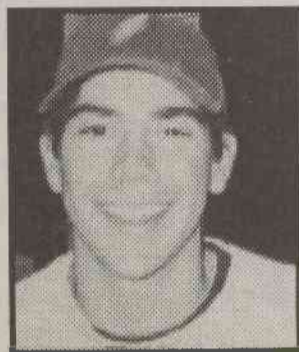

It will never change.
Jonathan Woodby

I guess I would try to effect racial change on an individual level by staying open-minded and not succumbing to stereotypes
Carolyn Carnahan

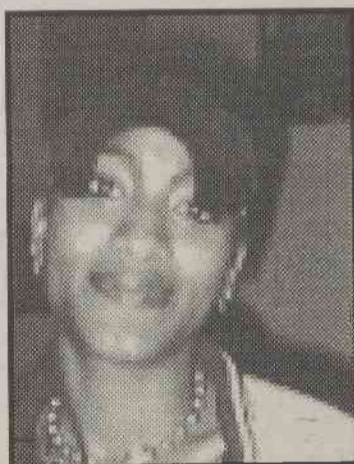

To change racism I would not let any criticism toward another color be omitted.

I would start teaching people when they are young that coming from different cultures and races is a good thing. We learn more about the world we live in when we are open to people of different cultures and races. I feel racism is something learned by people when they are young, and if racial teachings were ended the problem of racism would soon follow.

Joe Moerschbaecher

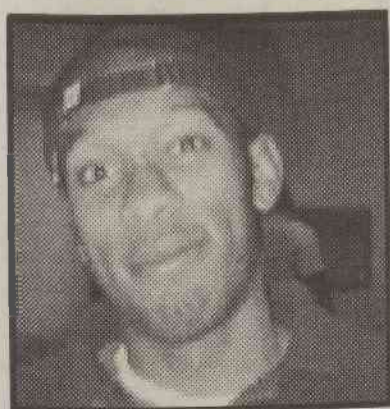

I would make people look past their differences concerning race, religion and cultural differences and make everyone realize how incredibly similar all members of the human race are.

Katherine Sullivan

I would have an awareness week where all people of different races come together under one classroom and talk about their cultural background.

Nothing. Nothing will ever change racism.

John McMillian.

I don't think it's ever going to change, because it is going to take blacks and whites communicating, which is going to lead to fighting.

Chi Chinaka

The only way I know to stop racism is to stop teaching racism.
