BC Safe Team

Safe SA Team in conjunction with SAFE Inc. of Transylvania County was started last spring and has progressed quite well. On September 21, 2000 Cricket Kittle, President of Safe SA Team, went under the sponsorship of SAFE Inc. of Transylvania County (with Donnita Dicus, Sexual Assault Community Educator and Counselor) to the NC Coalition Against Sexual Assault Conference. They presented the idea of Light the Fire, "If you light the fire, it will take off on its own", and made it a "show and tell" describing a successful campus response program with students at the helm.

October is the month of Domestic Violence Awareness and also Males Against Violence, better known as the White Ribbon Campaign. Safe SA Team asks that all males who feel violence against women is the wrong action to take, please take part in wearing the white ribbons. On Homecoming weekend the Safe SA Team will be giving out the ribbons.

It is the goal of Safe SA Team to get a book going of anonymous stories about sexual assault experiences and hopes. Students are asked to contribute their stories, their names remaining anonymous. These stories can be e-mailed to safeteam@brevard.edu or sent to the Campus PO Box 5790. For anyone who is just interested or needs it, the SAFE Inc. hotline number is 885-7233. Safe SA Team is here to help students with sexual assault prevention and awareness.

enchancing audiences everywhere. It is aesthetically pleasing and visually stunning. The cinematography is breathtaking with beautiful settings of magical realms.

The film offered Tom Cruise his first-ever role in a motion picture, Mia Sara, and Tim Curry, who played the brilliantly portrayed villain.

The soundtrack of Legend is a mesmerizing compilation of songs and scores by the new-age phenomenon, Tangerine Dream. The music really captures the essence of the movie. The tunes are whimsical and melancholy, with impressing lyrics.

Legend, a complete fantasy and a true fairy tale, is an excellent way to escape and relax for a while. It is quite easy to be taken away with, especially after a long, trying day of reality.

ter of each hind-wing. For a visual comparison, go to our website.

One of the best places to observe monarch migration is the Cherry Cove overlook on the Blue Ridge Parkway, just south of the 276 exit near mile marker 416.

To stand in the midst of a monarch migration, as they suddenly appear over the trees to the north, glide by within a few feet, then drop off the ridge to the treetops in the south, is an immersion into the natural world.

It's worth the effort.

our crew with knowledge of the forest area we were working in. They informed us on the civilizations that once lived in the area, taking us to the living quarters where these Americans dwelled. The foresters also explained to us the environmentally sound practice of tree harvesting and the benefits which some wildlife is able to get from it. Although I learned a great deal while working on the trail, the greatest experience was in the friendships I made with the other members of my crew.

We met for the first time as complete strangers and within those five weeks we became lifelong friends. We shared stories and experiences about the lives we lived back home. While working on the trail, we would share our sweat and dreams with one another. One of our crew leaders even provided me with maternal-like care when I became ill. This incident allowed the friendship between us to become even greater. As our program came to an end, we spent the last few days on a backpacking trip enjoying the friendships we had made with one another. This trip was a time of celebration for the work we had accomplished and also a time to share some final special moments with one another before we went our separate ways.

I had entered the SCA program as a volunteer who was going to give of myself so the environment would be better off. As I departed the airport and the friends I had made, I wondered who had gained more from the work I had done, the land or myself? Could it be possible that while being exposed to the beauty of nature, and by trying to care for it, I was taught by it in some unexplainable way?

This experience is available to any qualified individual through the SCA, which also provides college internships and urban programs. To hear the knowledge nature has to share with you and to make lifelong friendships give the Student Conservation Association a try. This opportunity to serve nature may change your life.
