really listened to the Blues, this is an excellent jewel to start with. Five big ones! (**)

Oasis, What's the Story, Morning Glory? (Epic Records 1995)

It seems that someone went off to college and mom cleaned out the clutter in what is now, the "guest room". Hard to believe that this one is ten years old. The writings of Noel Gallagher and lead guitar of Paul Weller took the states by storm. This nugget will put the blood flow back into your foggy head. The great thing about Oasis is that they don't care what American kids think, they will go down into history as a great slap in the face of an antiestablishment band that got air play on top forty radio. From start to finish, What's the Story, Morning Glory? travels well on a lengthy road trip, which in my opinion, is the criteria of a classic. If you ever had a summer fling at camp, the song Don't Go Away from Me from Be here Now, still takes you down mammary lane. The 12th track, Champagne Supernova, became an anthem of sorts for those who remember the line..."where were you when we were getting high?" I always thought to my self, "Dang it! I always miss stuff!"

The return of Oasis, recently blew right past most former devotees, however as with most great bands, the first couple of releases will carry the band through the later, more sober years.

I still give this diamond in the rough...four and a half shiners! (1/2)

The Best Of Jimmy Dean, (Columbia Records 2004)

And you thought all this guy did was make sausage? Wake up and smell the vintage country hits. This one is a rerelease of songs written by Jimmy Dean from 1961 until 1964. Dean came around about the same time as Patsy Cline and Gomer Pyle. Can't remember anything he did? How about the theme song of our dear friend "TEX"...whose real name is John...anyone?...the song that talks about a big coal miner guy? "Big John" jeez, was that so difficult? Tex is the reincarnation of a fictional character in a song written and sung by a famous sausage king! How many of us can say that?

To be honest the rest of the album is only appropriate if you are a trucker and have a cheap date for the night at Stuckey's interstate truck stop. The ballads and stories will only appeal to those who remember life before the late great Johnny Cash...a moment of silence please.....() perience, school officials said that, after much initial doubt, the program provided an increased enrollment, a better gender balance, a better relationship with the community, and an increase in certain academic majors. However, the school said that since the program has began, there have been an increase in the number of disciplinary problems, the faculty is still skeptical about funding the program, and it has added another large clique to the student interaction patterns on campus.

Before a football team can be added, the school will have to decide which athletic conference they wish to belong. Since only two schools in our current conference have football programs, Brevard is looking into the possibility of joining the NCAA division II or III. There is no division III conference in close proximity to Brevard, however, the closest division II conference is the South Atlantic Conference, or SAC 8, where Brevard would be competing among the likes of Catawba College, Lenoir-Rhyne, and Mars Hill.

According to school officials at Brevard, the addition of a football program would not increase tuition but actually reduce the increase that we have experienced over the past few years, and it would not cut any current programs.

The college is currently in conversations with the Transylvania School system to see if it could use the Brevard High School field for its competitions. Practice areas have already been determined on the campus, and a location for a future playing field to be located is under investigation.

Campus and community meetings over the addition of a football program at Brevard will begin this month.

From the results of those meetings, the school will submit a final report to the trustees, and board action will be made during their first meeting in June.
