BJ's Pet Peeves #2: Dude, you eat THAT?!

by BJ Wanl;und Contributor

All right, after coming up with just one pet peeve, people who shall remain nameless are begging me to write another. Could I find another pet peeve? If you are reading this, I could and I did.

This time, my pet peeve are those guys (you know who you are) who ask me what the h-e-double hockey sticks I'm eating in the caf.

Yes, I know full well that I have some weird and wacky food tastes, but please, for the love of God, I have absolutely no need for them to be rubbed in my face constantly.

I will explain just two of my weird delicacies.

The first goes all the way back to when I was a child. I was a very weird child, as the only thing I would eat (during that phase when you eat one thing and one thing only) is green beans, straight out of the can, with ketchup squirted all over it. I still eat it from time to time as a comfort food.

The second is one that people have seen me eating in the caf and were, to put it lightly,

CHANGE at the volleyball game

A student dressed as President elect Barack Obama paraded the sidelines of the BC-Tusculum volleyball game Wednesday night, shaking hands with his constituency and dancing in celebration in between sets. The response to Obama was, characteristically, enthusiastic from the younger memmbers of the audience, yet slightly more reserved by the older spectators.

totally grossed out. It's another one of my weird childhood comfort foods, and it's mustard (straight mustard, now) between two slices of bread. I call it (accurately, I might add) a "mustard sandwich".

Of course, my mother and I both eat this stuff when we need to settle our stomachs. Especially yours truly, as my stomach is extremely volatile, and most of the items in Myers Dining Hall I can barely eat without some stupid stomach problems immediately thereafter.

So to conclude, please don't ask me what the h-e-double hockey sticks I'm eating if you don't want a totally gross answer.
