American Hero

Usually, the editorial staff of The Clarion use this space to poke fun at behavior or actions which are generally un-American, amuse us, or because we think it would be funny to make fun of something/someone. However, when a person or a group of people prove themselves to be very American and do something which is truly worthy of being an American Hero, we sometimes feel the need to actually recognize them in a serious fashion. As we all know, there was a horrific tragedy in Haiti, both an earthquake and an aftershock, and noone really knows how many people have died (preliminary estimates are over 200,000), how much damage has been done, and how long it will take for Haiti to recover. Still, both American aid groups and the military ventured to Haiti to help with the relief effort and try to help the Haitians get back on their feet and recover as best as possible from this tragedy. This is why we at The Clarion would like to salute everyone who has in any way contributed to the relief effort, donating money or time, or really in any way at all.
