AMERICAN HERO

We at The Clarion can't decide if Reggie Bush, this week's American Hero, deserves acclaim or criticism; so we leave it for you to decide.

On one hand, he apologetically admitted to violating NCAA regulations by accepting gifts from sports marketers while still being a collegiate athlete and returned the Heisman Trophy up-front and without contest.

On the other hand, he completely screwed over the school where he began his career as a football superstar. Now, due to his actions, the University of Southern California faces the suspension of 30 scholarships for three years, a two year bowl game ban and a four year probationary period.

SIGN OF THE TIMES

By Daniel Heyman and David Alexander
Managing Editor and Copy Editor

In the tradition of "Tosh .0," we came up with the following one-liners to accompany this week's Sign of the Times:

- >Do you get a ticket for loitering if you're just waiting in line?
- >Do you rent the van by the hour too?
- >Does the van play Roxanne instead of the ice-cream truck song?
- >Is he the fourth guy that day!?
- >Doing donuts in that van probably costs extra.
- >I thought mini-vans smelled bad after soccer practice.
- >Something tells me the shocks aren't the most beat up thing in that van.
