

BCE explores drug use, jazz legends

By Sarah Bowers
Staff Writer

BCE 111: Addicted to Jazz, taught by Assistant Director of Music, Steve Wilson explores the history of jazz and drug use by some of the most famous jazz musicians from back in the day, such as Louis Armstrong and Sidney Bechet.

"This class gives music majors the history behind jazz," says Wilson, "and it gives people who don't like Jazz at least an appreciation for it!"

The class also debates whether or not the drug use by those famous jazz greats contributed to their creative process. "I'm a music major, so this class helps me understand how and where these artists are coming from," says Olivia Willie, a student in the class. "Jazz is a lot looser than other music styles."

"I would have to say that my favorite part is how laid back the class is." Willie comments. "The discussions are free form, and it allows for an easy flow of all kinds of ideas. Like free form jazz!" she laughs.

Jazz is a completely American style of music-it was created here and is thought to have originated in New Orleans. The history of Jazz is uncertain, because the first original recordings of jazz weren't made until 1917 in Chicago.

"I like getting to know students I otherwise would never get to see-because they aren't music majors," says Wilson. "Face it, if you aren't a music major, you never take a step in this building!" he smiles.

"I have spoken with some previous students from the class, and they say they have grown an appreciation for Jazz music," says Wilson. "Hopefully that appreciation will spread to art and other disciplines. It's a new way of thinking."

Library databases now available via smartphone

Brevard College Library brings its EBSCOhost databases to users through their smartphones. EBSCOhost Mobile now allows researchers to access more than 30 EBSCOhost databases via smartphones and other handheld devices. The EBSCOhost interface is the most-used research platform currently available in more than 100,000 libraries around the world, including Brevard College.

EBSCOhost Mobile provides a convenient way for students and faculty using mobile devices to find quality content. The main screen offers a number of options including choosing which EBSCOhost databases to search plus setting search options, limiting to full text, date ranges, peer-reviewed content or by publication. Users can also search images from their mobile devices.

SAAC to sell homecoming shirts

By Elise Labus
SAAC Representative

As the semester drives into full gear the SAAC (Student-Athletic Advisory Committee) has had many meetings to begin the 2010-2011 year. Led by Drew Schauss as president and Candice Fritz, vice president, this committee has come up with several events and ways to create community among the sports teams respectively, the school as a whole and within the Brevard community itself. Our goal is to find ways to not only bridge the teams but bridge the involvement among athletes and non athletes. With Homecoming fast approaching the SAAC is also producing homecoming T-shirts featuring this logo:

T-Shirt sales will take place Oct. 17-22 and will be available by pre-order and payable by cash only. For purchasing information contact: Bethany Stevenson, Candice Fritz, or Elise Labus.
