nation to have one million electric cars on the roads within five years.

While Obama said green jobs are currently abundant in countries like China, the U.S. has not been moving fast enough to create these opportunities.

"Those are jobs that could be created right here that are getting shipped overseas," Obama said.

Companies like Orion, Obama said, are the exception to this statement. National investment in small, clean energy companies like this will be the key to a successful American economy.

Republican Gov. Scott Walker, who attended Obama's speech, said he and the president had a healthy conversation when Walker was first elected governor, and although they may root for opposing sides, he hoped they could work together with congress to revive the American economy.

"I don't care about parties as long as people are working in the right direction when it comes to jobs," Walker said. "I think in the end for either of us [Wisconsin voters are] going to judge us on job performance, and that's something I'm looking forward to."

Walker also mentioned a Green Bay Packers jersey he had given to the president, an avid Chicago Bears fan, with the name 'Obama' and the number one. The rivalry was joked about throughout the event, but Obama connected the Packers' upcoming Super Bowl appearance with his goals of innovation, reminding the audience of famous words from legendary Coach Vince Lombardi.

"There is no room for second place. There is only one place in my game, and that's first place.' That's the kind of determination to win that America needs to show right now," Obama said. "We need to win the future."

AMERICAN HERO

Following the State of the Union address, it's customary for the opposing party to select a representative to give a formal rebuttal. However, this year the Tea Party would not be counted out.

We guess Sarah Palin was too busy, because Tea Party Express asked Michele Bachmann to issue her own unofficial rebuttal.

Two cameras were used to film her speech and Bachmann completely ignored the one feeding to CNN. Those watching the live stream on TeaPartyExpress.com saw the ramblings of a crazy woman, those watching on basic cable saw the ramblings of a crazy woman... looking slightly off camera to the left.

For being so far right, but not ignoring her left, Bachmann is this week's American Hero.
