Time is the Key

by Sibby Anderson
BSM President

Before the semester gets underway and everyone starts cracking down in their books, I would like to welcome everybody back and especially extend a warm (belated) greeting to the freshmen.

You have embarked upon one of the most important times of your life—your college education. The time you spend here at UNC-CH will greatly influence your outlook of the world.

As you progress in your academic pursuits, you will encounter many experiences which will challenge your present beliefs and values. In time these experiences will assist in your individual growth and development as future leaders of tomorrow.

However, just as time serves to bring about growth and development, the passage of time can also suppress efforts of change.

For instance, time has permitted the South African minority government to legally enforce an exploitative and racially oppressive system which discriminates against the country's million Blacks. This system denies them the right to vote, own land or travel freely in their own country. It is time for a change.

Influential Civil and Human Right's leader, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. once wrote that, "...time is always ripe to do right...without hard work, time becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation."

King wrote this quote while imprisoned in the Birmingham County jail. It was written in response to a public statement made by Alabama clergymen who saw the Civil Right's Movement of the 1960's as "unwise and untimely."

Some 300 years before, the institution of slavery stripped our African ancestors of their heritage, language, and religion. Eventually, they were left with only a faint but vital culture, rich in it's portrayal of the African aesthetic.

The dynamics of slavery and oppression has survived through this culture but not without the frustration and pain of "waiting" for dreams of acceptance to be acknowledged and fulfilled.

Today, our African brothers and sisters are going through a similar struggle which to some may appear "unwise and untimely." Yet, on the contrary, the time will never be more "ripe" to actively seek the social and political acceptance which should rightly be theirs.
