Dear Readers:

I would like to personally invite you to attend the "Women and Minority Business networking Seminar" which will be held on Friday, April 18, 1986, from 2-5:30 in Great Hall. The Seminar is specifically designed to allow students the opportunity to meet and establish ties with women and minorities in the executive sector of the business world. The Seminar will provide a career fair atmosphere where students will be able to submit resumes and discuss opportunities with prospective employers. This seminar is being sponsored by the Orange County Women's Center, The Black Student Movement, and Hinton James Residence Hall.

We would deeply appreciate your support in our effort to promote relations among UNC students and our national and local women and minority business leaders. If you have any questions concerning the seminar, please contact me at 933-4574

Sincerely,
Marjorie Roach

The Carolina Union Human Relations Committee will present a lecture by UNC psychology professor Dr. Richard Lucas on "Living With Loss" on April 2 at 7 p.m. in room 224 of the Union.

Dr. Lucas will answer questions about personal grief and will talk about how to help others deal with it. He will answer such questions as: How do I deal with sudden death?; How do I comfort someone else?; What is the proper way to grieve?

The Human Relations Committee sponsored a similar program with Dr. Lucas last year which was successful.

Dr. Lucas has also conducted workshops on "Supporting the Bereaved Person," "Normal and Abnormal Grieving," and "Nurses' Response to Sudden Death."

While this is not an upbeat topic, it is one that affects everyone.

In Perspective

Much fuss has been made about the conditions of the Campus Y (an organization, incidentally, that blacks have an inadequate voice in and should become more active in) and most specifically, the detente involving Director Zenobia Hatcher-Wilson and Associate Director George Gamble. I don't want to beat a dead horse, however, the recent resurgence of information in publications such as the Phoenix and the Daily Tar Heel force me to try to present another perspective on the issue.

The facts, though well known, bear repeating. In the summer of 1985, Hatcher-Wilson was appointed as Campus Y Director. Among the candidates she was chosen over Gamble, then serving as Associate Director. According to all sources, different perspectives and pursuit of different goals led to mutual feelings of discontent and a major breakdown of communications. In order to preserve some type of order at the Y's offices, Gamble was fired on October 9, 1985. However, due primarily to student protest and intense negotiation, Gamble was reinstated in late December, 1985. A condition to the reinstatement, then unknown to the public, was that Gamble sign a letter of resignation effective May 15, 1986. Nevertheless, in understandable concern for his job, Gamble went public with the conditions all parties had agreed to keep silent. According to Devi Sen, staff writer for the Phoenix, Gamble said the letter was, "an improper condition." Further, he said, "No one else was going to make it public. I had to." Of course, once the condition was known, the furor started again.

Now, some other facts. Hatcher-Wilson is a black female. Gamble is a white male. This should have no bearing on this case. It does. We are all well aware of the poor affirmative action measures enacted by this university, and equally aware of the lackluster percentages of both blacks and women in administrative positions on campus. Very rarely does a black woman from out of the system receive an appointment also desired by a white male with long experience at UNC. Further, Hatcher-Wilson did not fire George Gamble. True, she did make
