Race Relations Week: A Group Effort

By Vaness Howard

On April 11-14, 1989, various campus groups will sponsor Race Relations Week. Those groups include the Students for the Advancement of Race Relations, the Carolina Indian Circle, the Prejudice Reduction Group and members of the Bahai. The idea was formulated by two students, Lee Latimer, a junior, and Chris Mumford, a senior, in order to promote social interaction and discussions on the issue of race relations.

Race Relations Week will feature different events of high-quality experience each night. The first evening will feature a speaker, which is unknown at this time. The second evening will include a series of workshops, and the third will feature social events sponsored by Greek organizations. To finish off the week, a jazz festival will be held along with activities in the Pit.

The groups hope to bring a diversity of students together to address the issue of race relations as a unified effort. They want to find out how students stand, and they feel their efforts will be enhanced through publicity. There will be a joint effort on the part of all the groups. Latimer and Mumford will report progress to the Administration and make recommendations of other courses of action toward race relations. This effort will allow student feedback also. Mumford says, "The effort shows that race relations groups are working together on this." He also expressed his approval of Administration support. "The Administration is giving us a lot of backing."

New Associate Dean for Counseling

By Gerda Gallop

A new associate dean has been chosen to replace former Associate Dean Hayden P. Renwick in the Office for Student Counseling.

Rosalind Fuse-Hall of St. Lawrence University will join UNC in June to begin her duties as associate dean for the Office for Student Counseling, said Gillian T. Cell, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Fuse-Hall holds similar duties at St. Lawrence, and because of prior commitments, she is not able to join UNC until June, Cell said.

The search committee for the associate dean was notified early this semester of Fuse-Hall's appointment to the Office for Student Counseling, Cell added.

In addition, Cell wrote letters to BSM President Kenneth Perry, Carolina Indian Circle and Donald A. Boulton, vice chancellor and dean of student affairs, notifying them of her appointment.

"I think she'll do a good job," said Kenneth Perry, president of the Black Student Movement. "I'm impressed with her, and I'm glad that she got it."

Fuse-Hall attended UNC as an undergraduate student and worked in the Office for Student Counseling. She earned a law degree from Rutgers University, and after working with the law for a short time, she came to St. Lawrence, Cell said.

"She is exceiting and extremely dynamic and energetic," Cell said. "I feel very good about her coming."

There were 108 applications in the national search for the associate dean position, Cell said.
