Dana Lumsden For BSM President

Status quo:

Effective management, effective programming, thoughtful strategy, realistic goals, consistency, identity and increased membership.

The Challenge:

Effective management and leadership that recognizes the true enemy.

Effective programming through joint projects and well-publicized events. A BSM programming in coordination with the curriculum.

Thoughtful political strategy lead by active BSM sub-groups.

Realistic goals coupled with a long-term strategy that the freshman class committee will recognize and be knowledgeable of.

Consistency with the BSM

membership in strategy.

An Identity that recognizes and appreciates pluralism of ideas.

Increased membership coupled with Education; African-American students must understand the necessity of financially supporting an organization that supports them.

Academic:

We must advocate an increase in funding for the present Office for Student Counseling as well as any expanded version of that office. One does not expand use without expanding resources. We must attack the bogus arguments the University uses for denying the Curriculum in African and Afro-American Studies department status and proper funding.

Social:

Utilize joint programming initiatives to increase social opportunities for African-American students at UNC.

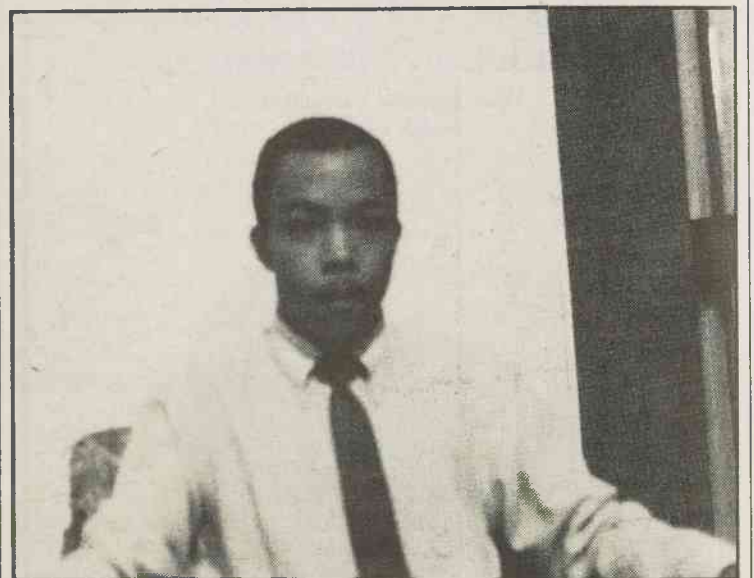

Politics:

Lobbying for a representative in the UNC Development Office who will advocate funding for a Black Cultural Center. Creating a highly politicized sub-group of the BSM that will concentrate on activism and work with other AHANA groups and numerical minorities on our common agenda.

Dillard Massey For Parliamentarian

The newly created office of parliamentarian is critically important to the smooth operations of the Black Student Movement. Our organization has grown tremendously within the past few years, and its continued success is solely dependent upon the strength of its governing document and the dedication of its members. I am such a member, having served the BSM and the campus' African-American community since the beginning of my freshman year. I am presently co-chair of the parliamentary committee and have worked with Black Ink, the Black Pre-Professional Health Society, student government, the Peer Piloting Program, and Tar Heel Target, just to name a few. In all of these capacities, I have sought to establish a base for academic and cultural enrichment.

As enumerated in the constitution that my committee drafted, the parliamentary duties will consist primarily of advising general body members on matters of constitutional law, presiding over disciplinary proceedings, revising the constitution when necessary and contributing as an associate member of the selections committee. Upon election, I plan to take these worthy endeavors a step further.

I will assist other Central Committee members in completing their planned yearly agendas. As a member of the selections committee, I will make certain that only the most competent and dedicated BSM members comprise the future Central Committee. I want to work with University housing officials in establishing a more suitable criterion for student placement in residence halls. I hope this will bring an end to the disgracefully segregated housing system and ultimately lead to a less racially tense campus.

I sincerely hope that you will consider my platform and vote for me on Wednesday, March 6.
