

Question of the Week:

Do you think that the host of a party should be help responsible for the actions of their guests?

Student Voices:

JEFF BATTLE, Senior sophomore

"No, you can't tell someone what to do.

They could do something crazy and then come to your party, and you can't blame the host for that. You don't know what their doing when they leave your party. However, while at your party the host should be held responsible for everything including underage drinking."

NATALIE LEWIS, Freshman

"Yes, because it's their house and things get broken and vandalized. Even when the guests leave, the host should be held responsible. I've been at parties where crazy stuff happens and the host should definitely be responsible for all of that."

NATHAN DIXON, Junior

"No. It's not fair if the host is held responsible for everyone, when a lot of times people bring their own beer. After they leave the house there is no way you can control their actions. I think they should lower the drinking age, then there would be no problems. But I think alcohol is bad and no one should drink."

KRYSTAL KORNEGAY, Senior

"No, because people should be responsible for their own actions. Just because random people come into your place, you shouldn't be responsible for everyone's actions. Here at UNCW, you're supposed to have your party approved by the Dean, and have a guest list. Then if someone leaves your party and goes and kills someone, you're responsible."
