

Speaking Of Sports

Baxley and Bunnell

The aim of the intramural sports at St. Andrews is to develop our student body physically, mentally, emotionally, and socially. The primary function of the sports program is to promote, organize, and administer a broad program of competitive and recreational activities for the voluntary participation of the student body, both men and women.

Through the wide variety of activities one may sample any number of activities in which he or she is interested. Women can be skilled and enthusiastic partners in recreational sports as well as in social activities. This program will also help in making new and lasting friendships that cannot be developed in the classroom.

The student body has already been divided into six teams that will participate in the program. It is hoped that all the students will participate, although this is strictly voluntary.

The men students and Mr. Hackney met together on the evening of Oct. 10 in the Liberal Arts Auditorium. Each person was given a sheet with the names of the people on each team. The men were divided as evenly as possible, and the better players have been placed on separate teams. The program for men includes touch-football, basketball, softball, and other sports. The rules for touch football were carefully explained. It is to be a type of powder-puff football in that all and any kind of bodily contact is illegal and will be penalized.

In deciding the champion of each sport a complicated point system will be used. A team will receive points for the number of teams it fields in each sport. The standing of all the teams of that particular sport will be taken into consideration in deciding the champion. For example, if one team entered three teams that finished second, third, and fifth, they would finish higher than another team which finished first, fourth, and seventh. This would be on the basis of the better over-all record. It is hoped that each team will divide its better players as much as possible among the teams which they plan to enter. In this way competition will be much more intense and interesting among the teams.

A Certain Blindness

by CHARLES QUICK

heading of this article. This "blindness," briefly, is the insensitivity of individuals to the ambitions, hopes, and desires of others. It seems that today more people are afflicted with this blindness but are often unaware that they are.

But more specifically, how does this insensitivity of individuals to the inner emotions of others take form? Intolerance is one way, plus a lack of genuine efforts to understand others. Through these two vices we fail to see the importance of another's hopes and desires; we fail to see these things in the light in which they are seen by the other individual.

There can be no contesting of the fact that joy is necessary for the existence and survival of the individual I do not mean only the joy that is shown by smiles and laughter, but an inner joy as well. Through our blindness we may stifle this joy or even make it impossible for the other person to seek his happiness.

The student and faculty committee, appointed by the Dean of the Faculty and the Dean of Students, will supervise the selection process and will publicize the final nominees in keeping with instructions from the Faculty Executive Committee and the Who's Who Home Office.

RGH

Most often this blindness of which I speak shows itself whenever we are intolerant of the activities and things which give joy to others. These things may seem entirely meaningless and even useless to us, but another individual may derive great pleasure from these very things. Here we see the problem of imposing upon others the world as we see it, and expect him to see everything in the same perspective and light that we do. If another does not or cannot see things in our way, our blindness takes over and we become intolerant and fail to understand why everyone does not see things as we do.

Who is our neighbor? Who is this other fellow of whom I have been speaking? A passage by Josiah Royce best tells us:

"What then is our neighbor? Thou hast regarded his thought his feeling, as somehow different from thine. Thou hast said a pain in him is not like a pain in me, but something far easier to bear. He seems to thee a little less living than thou; his life is dim, it is cold, it is a pale fire beside thy own burning desires . . . So, dimly and by instinct thou hast lived with thy neighbor, and hast known him not, being blind. Thou hast made (of him) a thing, no Self at all. Have done with this illusion, and simply try to learn the truth. Pain is pain, joy is joy, everywhere, even as in thee."

Due to our blindness we can hardly pronounce immediate judgment upon what is right and good for others. One must seek to find the perspective in which the other fellow views the world and attempt to understand. One never sees the whole picture — there is always that portion seen only by the other person.

Freshmen Feelings

by M. Preston Stone

It's probably bad journalistic etiquette to start off a column with an apology but forgive me if you will. The apology goes to Bob Zeh, Joyce Clanton, and Lonnie Mann whose comments were originally scheduled for this column. If they will forgive me and also if Chickie isn't too upset then we'll call it even. O.K?

Perhaps you are wondering why the last minute change in plans. It's like this — the other night I was reading about all the problems the "college freshman" is supposed to face. You know the kind of thing: adjusting to the first experience away from "the folks," budgeting his time, and just getting into the swing of things generally. This started me thinking. What problems. I? Ever think about it? Well I don't know what your answer is but as for me the answer is "no problem!" Oh sure there are some small things: for instance the chaos created by 16 people trying to use 3 sinks, 2 showers, etc. and still finish breakfast before 8:00 classes. Maybe you've got a roommate who reads all night or the people next door are Homer and Jethro fans. These problems aren't hard to overcome — throw rocks. Perhaps you can't go through a language lab without breaking a tape or jamming a machine or maybe you didn't know Abraham's home town on the Christianity and Culture test. C'est la vie! If you can't play bridge with Charlie Goren — try Robert Noll. Enough of this, but I hope you get the point. Maybe your view is different but I wonder? Think about it for a while. Try reading one of these articles and finding out what kind of problems you're supposed to have, you're liable to come up with the same answer I did. What? Problems?
