choose disciplines which show favorable job markets, the study indicated.

On the other hand, teaching is considered a high risk area for future employment for all races. Although there is an oversupply of teachers, 40 percent of the bachelor's and master's degrees earned by blacks in 1973-74 were in teacher education. This compares to only 29 percent for all college graduates.

The SREB report also warns of market saturation and diminishing opportunities for blacks in overcrowded fields, even though blacks are not highly represented in some of them.

"Although affirmative action programs may possibly offset scarcity of openings in fields such as communications, architecture, law, pharmacy, psychology, letters and biological sciences" observed Eva Galambos, author of the report, "the job search will be easier for blacks who earn degrees in other fields where job openings exceed numbers of emerging graduates of all races."

Black college graduates in 1980 will constitute 11.3 percent of all region's total market-ready graduates, Dr. Galambos predicts. The proportion in the various fields of study, however, differs from this overall 11.3 percent share. For example, market-ready black engineering graduates are projected to represent 4.4 percent of the total in engineering but 15.9 percent in teacher education. Although in both fields, blacks are underrepresented relative to their proportion of the entire regional black population, blacks in education are overrepresented relative to their proportion of market-ready degrees in all fields of study.

may also be used by any student because no identification is required.

The Board of Trustees are having a meeting in March and the issue will be introduced then. However the university will probably put a firmer policy back into effect, whereby students living on campus will be required to participate in the meal plan. This is because of the financial aspects of the situation. The dining hall cannot operate at prices students can afford, unless it has volume. The larger amount of students participating in the meal plan, the cheaper the prices. If a majority of students discontinue the plan, the students that continue to participate cannot pay for their meals.

Responding to the piercing notes of such songs as "God Specializes," the audience joined in to sing with some of the cast members.

"Life of a King" was written by Authur Langford, Jr. in 1968. It was first presented in Atlanta, Ga. in 1969.

The crowd's warm response and standing ovation indicated the play was a success.
