In Memory of Jeffery Byrum

When I am alone
I think of you most
The friend I have
But the friend I have lost

You're in my heart for all my days
The one I loved with no shame
You were always there and there you will be My comrade at arms
whenever in need
You held my soul and kept it afloat
The man who made a difference
whenever alone

That's why I think of you so
The friend I have
But the friend I have lost

Helpful Tips For Freshman Students

Soon strange caravans of station wagons, vans, trailers and trucks will make their ways over highways and city streets leading to the nation's colleges and universities.

This is the annual migration of college students back to residence halls, fraternity and sorority houses and apartments. With them comes a collection of personal possessions as diverse and unique as the students themselves.

Freshmen making the pilgrimage for the first time may find themselves confused about what to bring to college—or what to leave at home. Students at North Carolina State University provided some expert suggestions on matters of packing for college.

Gary Mauney of Matthews, a senior and president of the student body at NCSU, suggested that comfort during the last months of summer should be a top priority in packing for college. Mauney recommended that students bring two fans to non-air-conditioned residence halls—one to blow cooler air into the room and one to blow hotter air out.

Jeff Gorrutz of Daytona, Fla., a senior at NCSU, agreed.

"When I lived on campus the first time, a fan was the first thing I noticed I didn't have," Gorrutz said.

Mauney also recommended that students be conservative in the amount of belongings they pack.

"Don't bring too much stuff to a dorm room on your first trip to college," Mauney said. "There may not be room for it all. Take the essentials but not the clutter."

Many students like to bring items for light meal preparation. But before purchasing a refrigerator, hot plate or microwave oven, Mauney recommends that students check their university's rules on these items. Rules vary and change often, he said.

Sometimes refrigerators for residence halls can be rented, Mauney said. But students planning to live on campus for several years may consider purchasing a refrigerator to be more economical, he said.

Eric Beatty, an NCSU senior from Burlington, said new students should plan their "entertainment systems"—stereos and televisions. Before bringing these large items to campus, students should consult their roommates to find out what they are planning to bring, he said.

Whether a stereo is involved or not, Beatty recommends that students make an effort to communicate with roommates before school begins.

"It's always good to get to know your roommate before you come to campus. Call him or write to him," he said.

Jeff Pratt of Eden, an NCSU senior, said two essential items for college students are a popcorn popper and a cooler.

Gorrutz, the senior from Florida, recommended that students leaving for college in another state learn about the area's climate before planning a new wardrobe. The long-sleeve T-shirts he sported in Florida's winters were not adequate for North Carolina's temperatures, he said.

A pamphlet on shopping places provided by Raleigh's Chamber of Commerce helped Gorrutz find places to buy affordable clothing to fit the climate here, he said.

Out-of-state students probably will not make many trips home during a semester, so they need to plan ahead to bring clothing and other items they will need in later months, said Alan Pater-noster, an NCSU senior from Melbourne, Fla.

Students can make a residence hall a home by planning ahead. Posters can help add flair to residence hall life, Beatty said.

Bedspreads, drapes and carpet can add a personal touch to a dormitory room, said senior Donna White of Rockingham. She also recommended bringing personal mementos and pictures of family and high school friends.

Universities have different policies on painting residence hall rooms. Gorrutz recommended that students check on the rules and plan to paint if their rooms need a fresh coat.

White also recommended that students bring a bulletin board for their doors.

And don't forget the essentials! Hair dryers, toiletries, cosmetics, desk lights, a shower bucket, sheets and towels, dictionaries and other reference books were among other items recommended by NCSU students.

New students should not panic if they forget something on their first trip to college, Mauney said. There are always places nearby to buy most of what students need, he said.
