studying accounting/management

By Bertie Ray, III

In the heat of competition, Felicia Richardson was able to maintain her composure and grace, and offered some words of wisdom to her competitors. "Those of us who are participating and may not win, don't look upon this as a failure." From this response to her challenging question, a victory in her favor was evident.

Miss Homecoming 1988 is a junior accounting/management major from Florence, S.C. She is the youngest of eight sisters and she enjoys performing and spending time with friends. She confesses that she believed whole-heartedly that a fellow contestant had the pageant wrapped-up, but she expresses joy and adulation with her victory.

Felicia denies being a beauty queen, but from the applause, hugs and kisses from the large crowd, she is in fact a winner and a beauty queen.

She sees her victory as a step toward future success and plans to make her reign active and enjoyable.

Realizing that Miss Homecoming is a representative and a leader, Felicia feels that the honor of being Miss Homecoming should be treated with respect and even admiration. She hopes that future pageants are held on the first day of Homecoming Week so that Miss Homecoming can enjoy all of the joys and responsibilities to the fullest - that includes being present at all official Homecoming events.

Miss Homecoming 1988 is charming, articulate and witty. She carries an aura of grace and her laudable personality is radiant.
