

Introducing ...

MISS SUSAN DIXON

Wesleyan would be much smaller without the day students, and it would be much duller without Susan, for she is fun to be with.

Last year she graduated from Northern Nash in Rocky Mount and decided to come to Wesleyan. It should compliment some professor to know that she enjoys chemistry more than any of her other subjects.

Susan likes to spend her spare time having fun and trying to ride an over-spirited horse. If someday she should appear bruised and sore, it is probable that she's been horse-back riding again.

She plans to transfer to Medical College of Virginia as a junior to study pharmacy. So she'll be here one more year. If you don't know her you are missing a person as genuinely sincere as she is fun. Once you know her, you'll never forget her; so make a point to meet Susan.

The Vault Opens In Rocky Mount

The basement of the old Peoples' Bank Building has been turned into a most unusual facility. First advertised as Rocky Mount's Christian Coffee House, The Vault has grown into a truly different source of entertainment. Even though it has the distinction of being operated by the Women's Society for Christian Service of the First Methodist Church, Wesleyan has taken over by providing the chairman of the entertainment committee and the weekend managers of the establishment. George Watson, a son of Rocky Mount, heads the committee while Steve Gordon and Brian Flynn alternate command on Friday and Saturday nights.

The Vault opens its doors from 7:30 until 11:30 on Friday and Saturday nights only. The management reports that attendance has been very good and the tables are usually filled by 9:30, but of course their is always standing room. Wesleyan again made its influence known in the form of Dr. Ralph James, who held an autograph party at The Vault and also favored those in attendance with a discussion session on his new book, The Concrete God. The management fondly remembers the necessity of turning off the entrance lights in order to discourage further customers from entering.

The décor of the coffee house is both practical and farout in design. The patrons sit at tables made out of electrical-wire spools. A mirror occupies one wall and the mirror itself is decorated with psychedelic pictures. The antiquated marble floors of the old building add to the atmosphere. Furnishings are rounded out by the performing area.

Brian Flynn enjoys working there because he has the chance to play his guitar and sing as well as wait on customers.

This can change work into pleasure, or almost anyway.

When live entertainment is lacking during a break, a stereo provides mood music, while not "Musak" it is effective. Other featured performers have been Rick Hosack and Tom Garlow.

Coffee and tea are continually served and there seems to be an ever ample supply of home-made pies, cakes, cookies, and brownies.

Visit The Vault and try this type of entertainment and "fellowship" on for size.

Avoid dull weekends!
Plan ahead
by phone.

And call early. Friday or even Thursday is no time to ask a girl for a weekend date. And being broke is no excuse because now you can call just about anywhere in the country at low evening rates. So next time you plan a swingin' weekend, make your plans by phone. And get an early start. Like Monday. She'll appreciate your thoughtfulness. Have fun!
