Valentine backs using amendment to balance budget

U.S. Rep. Tim Valentine of Nashville has joined nearly 250 members of the U.S. House in introducing a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Valentine has co-sponsored similar legislation in every session of Congress since his election to the U.S. House in 1983.

"I am not in favor of haphazardly amending the legal foundation of the United States, which is the Constitution," he said in a statement to his colleagues. "The urgent need to get our fiscal house in order, however, is so acute I do not believe we have the luxury of putting off the day of reckoning any longer."

The sixth-term Democrat from the Second District said, "I believe that a balanced budget amendment is the first step toward reducing the national debt, but I realize this amendment will not solve all of our economic problems."

"I am not saying that a balanced budget amendment will make our choices to cut spending or raise revenue any easier," he said. "What it will do is force us to make those difficult choices."

Noting that Congress has added $3 trillion to the national debt over the past 10 years, Valentine said, "We finally have a President who says he is committed to serious deficit reduction. Let us become full partners with him in that effort. The balanced budget amendment is the first step."
