MEET YOUR SUPERVISOR

On June 10, 1963, Charles T. Tuttle, superintendent of the Finishing Department of the ladies' hosiery division, rounded out twenty-five years of service with Adams-Millis Corporation. Starting in 1938 as beat-out boy in the Boarding Department, he rose rapidly through the ranks to his present-day supervisory position.

Charles Tuttle

Charles T. Tuttle was born to Flora Martin and Charles McKinley Tuttle on April 9, 1921, in High Point, North Carolina. He graduated from High Point Central High School in 1938. Just after graduation, he secured a day job with Adams-Millis and attended Jones Business College at night. In the fall of the same year, he received his first promotion--he became box printer in the Folding Department. There soon followed another of many promotions; this time, the change was to checker and packer in the Shipping Department. World War II came along in 1941 and, in the absence of the shipping clerk who went on military leave, Charlie acted in that capacity, a job to which he soon received a permanent transfer. From there, it was but a short step for him to the job of supervisor of the Folding, Transferring and Shipping Departments. And, in November of 1961, he was named superintendent of the Finishing Division, the title he holds today.

Charles Tuttle's successful career in hosiery manufacturing is not unique in his family. His father before him worked for many years in the hosiery industry and at the time of his death in 1952, was superintendent of the Finishing Department of Adams-Millis Corporation's Pointer plant on Grimes Street.

During the war, Miss Louise Cole of Aberdeen, N. C., who was at that time employed by the War Demobilization Records Branch in High Point, struck Charlie's fancy and on October 1, 1944, she became Mrs. Charles Tuttle. She was employed by Adams-Millis as timekeeper in the Full Fashioned Knitting Department for fourteen years prior to her resignation in 1959 to become receptionist in a local doctor's office.

The Tuttles have no children; however, their principal interest has been in the next best thing--dogs. For many years, they bred dachshunds and beagles, which won ribbons in dog shows in North and South Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee. Only recently, with mixed emotions, they found a new home for their last pair of beagles.

The Tuttles live at 2500 North Centennial Avenue in High Point and are members of Main Street Methodist Church where Charlie is on the Board of Stewards and chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the Big Brothers Class. He is a past president of the Furniture City Kennel Club and a member of the High Point Golf Association. His hobbies include hunting, fishing and golfing.
