

Zona Carter, Plant 3

Supervisor Of The Quarter

Styles, Colors Blend

KERNERSVILLE—In 1949 Zona Carter joined the Adams-Millis Family at Plant 4. Later she moved over to Plant 3 and she's been there ever since.

When she came to Adams-Millis her job was attaching "riders" to socks. She later moved to pairing and in 1972 she became assistant supervisor of pairing, a position she holds today.

During her 38 years with the company, the Kernersville native says she has seen many changes in hosiery.

"There's more and more styles and colors for customers today," she explained. "They all sort of blend together."

She's the second in her family to be an Adams-Millis supervisor. Her father, DeWitt Winfree, was a supervisor of knitting for many years at Plant 7.

"I'm satisfied with my time here," she said of her 38 years with Adams-Millis.

Away from work Carter said she "loves to square dance." It's an activity she has enjoyed for a long time.

"It helps keep you young," she said.

In addition to dancing she enjoys watching sports—football, basketball and baseball, especially seeing one of her five grand children, Kevin Caudill, play American League baseball.

Carter said she's a fan of the Carolina, the Dallas Cowboys and Atlanta Braves.

"I'm a Braves fan even though they're not doing good this year," she said.

She is married to Willie Carter and they have two children.

Mom, Daughter Earn College Degrees

Mother's Day 1987 was especially gratifying for an Adams-Millis employee and her mother. It was not only Mother's Day but also graduation day at High Point College for the pair.

Gail Price, 22, a seamer at Plant 7 in High Point, and her mother Betty Price-Burris, 44, completed a grueling four years of work and study to receive their diplomas.

Gail received a bachelor's degree in sociology and her mother, a bachelor's degree in business administration.

"We were so tired when it was over," Gail said. "I laid across the bed. I was so pooped. I told Mom, 'Does this mean we're really through?'"

Their graduation ended years of full time work, study and family responsibilities.

Ms. Price-Burris, who works as a collections analyst at a bank in Greensboro, was unable to attend college when she graduated from high school 26 years ago, although she earned a scholarship.

When Gail graduated in 1982 from Southwest Guilford High School and enrolled in High Point College, her mother did too, realizing the dream which had earlier escaped her.

Their college years were tough but resulted in the two becoming closer friends, studying and attending classes together. Those classes were sandwiched in during lunch breaks and at night.

In addition to college studies and working full time, Ms. Price-Burris served as treasurer for the Friends of the High Point Theater and was active in her church, United Memorial Methodist in High Point.

Gail worked full time at Biscuitville before joining Adams-Mills during her college career.

"My last year I was busy day and night, going to two colleges and working," Gail said. "I didn't have time for any extracurricular activities."

The duo took a few courses at N.C. A&T State University in Greensboro in addition to their studies at High Point College.

"I'd be sitting in class. The professor would be talking and I'd be half asleep, not hearing what he was saying," Gail recalled. "There were a couple of times I got depressed and said I was not going back. Each time Mom would say, 'I'm going to registration,' and I'd end up going, too. I couldn't let her leave because everybody would say, 'Oh, your mother finished and you didn't.'"

At one point Gail's hectic pace became too much for her. She became fatigued and was placed under a doctor's care for exhaustion.

Graduation provided a feeling of exhilaration and accomplishment that was almost unbelievable.

"That Monday, I looked at Mom and said, 'We don't have any classes now,'" Gail recalled. "We grabbed each other and laughed."

We were so tired, but happy," Mrs. Price-Burris added. "I couldn't be any other way."

Now that they have their degrees Ms. Price-Burris plans to use hers as a stepping stone up the career ladder at the bank and hopes to find an open position in business.
